Preface

The CDE Stock Ownership Directory: Transportation Industry is a concise reference guide to the ownership and control of the nation's leading transportation companies. The CDE profiles 176 major U.S. corporations, 101 of which are large enough to be ranked by Fortune.

This transportation volume is the first in an industry-by-industry series of CDE Stock Ownership Directories. Each volume will present accurate and detailed information on the principal voting stockholders of major U.S. companies. We hope these publications will meet the growing demand for such information from public interest groups, journalists, industry analysts, librarians, regulatory agencies and lawmakers.

Many interested persons have already inquired about the CDE's plans to update this material. While forthcoming editions of this industry series will be produced on a more timely basis, the CDE intends to update each volume at least every four years, or more frequently if there is sufficient public interest. In addition, many of the larger companies active in more than one industry will be updated more frequently due to their inclusion in several directories of the CDE series. The CDE will also provide upon request updated profiles of individual companies.

Every effort has been made to guarantee the accuracy of the data. Invariably some errors are bound to appear in such a comprehensive compilation. We urge the readers to call these to our attention and welcome suggestions about how to make future editions more useful.

The CDE Stock Ownership Directory: Transportation Industry is the product of one and a half years of painstaking research. This time-consuming investigation would have been even more difficult had it not been for the pioneering studies of the U.S. Senate Subcommittee on Reports, Accounting and Management. In numerous hearings and reports since 1972, the Subcommittee surveyed the quantity and accuracy of corporate ownership data available to the public from federal regulatory agencies. The documentation, methodology and conclusions of the Subcommittee's investigation were essential building blocks for our study. We are deeply indebted to the Subcommittee and its Staff Director, Mr. Vic Reinemer, who generously shared with us his experience and knowledge of this complex subject.

This study was produced with the limited resources common to many non-profit organizations. It was made possible through grants from the Transnational Institute (a project of the Institute for Policy Studies), the World Council of Churches, the Fund for Tomorrow, the United Methodist Church, the Samuel Rubin Foundation, Charles Pillsbury, W.H. Ferry and Carol Bernstein Ferry, as well as other individuals. We are also indebted to the patient and enduring support of numerous other persons and organizations whose encouragement carried us through our most difficult moments. A special thanks is also due the many individuals who helped compile, process, verify, typeset, and lay out the data for this Directory.

CORPORATE DATA EXCHANGE, INC.

The Corporate Data Exchange, Inc. (CDE) is an independent tax-exempt research organization formed in 1975 to investigate economic concentration and corporate control. CDE reviews corporate disclosure practices and works with public interest groups, churches, trade unions and other non-profit organizations in applying its research skills and data to their needs. To further this objective the CDE is developing and maintaining a comprehensive data base on the largest companies, including transnational corporations. Future publications and services of the CDE include:

Stock Ownership Project:

1. Directory Series: this volume on transportation will be followed by an industry-by-industry series covering Agribusiness (Fall 1977), Banking, Defense, Mining and Energy.
2. Updates: each volume of the Stock Ownership Directory Series will be updated at least every four years, and more frequently if there is sufficient public interest.
3. Computer Tape and Cards: the stockholder information contained in each Directory is available on magnetic tape or punched cards.
4. Index to Transportation Industry Stockholders: this supplement provides a complete cross-reference of all stockholders appearing in the Transportation Directory. Publication: Fall 1977.

Institutional Subscription: subscribers to this service are entitled to two copies of all Directories and other publications appearing during the year, and have the right to special stockholder profiles on two companies of their choice. Annual fee: $500.

Stockholder Profile Service: stockholder profiles on individual public corporations, comparable to those appearing in the Stock Ownership Directories, are available on request. Fee per profile: $150.

Non-profit organizations with small budgets may be eligible for lower rates. Please inquire for terms.

Guide to the Directory

This Directory consists of two parts. Part One provides some basic facts about the transportation industry and Part Two presents profiles of 176 companies with their principal voting stockholders. The following abstract will help the user become more familiar with the structure of the Directory.

PRELIMINARIES

Company Index

Abbreviations and Symbols

Glossary

PART ONE: TRANSPORTATION INDUSTRY

Introduction

- General information on the transportation industry and changing relationships between its different sectors.
- Explanation of the criteria used to select the major transportation companies.

Sector Chapters

- Eight chapters detailing the structure, economic dynamics, and government involvement for each transportation sector.
- Eight operator charts ranking transportation companies by 1974 operating revenues, including market share information, and identifying corporate parents.
- Statistical information on commodities transported, financial performance, and government involvement, presented in 103 tables.

PART TWO: COMPANY PROFILES

Stockholder Information

- Ranking of principal voting stockholders and percent of total outstanding votes.
- Commonly-controlled entities, such as investment companies and insurance companies, grouped under one complex.
- Breakdown of holdings according to voting and total management power.
- Large holdings where discretionary rights are not known.
- Voting concentration of the top 5, 10, 15, 20, and 25 shareholders.

General Company Information

- Financial data for each company, including sales, debt, income tax paid, foreign operations, and a breakdown of operating revenue and income by business line.
- Principal underwriters and legal counsels, including fees paid.

HOW TO FIND A COMPANY

Most of your information searches will bring you to the 176 company profiles arranged in alphabetical order in Part Two. Such companies appear throughout the Directory in all UPPER CASE letters. Transportation companies which are subsidiaries or affiliates and do not appear in Part Two are printed in upper and lower case letters. To determine whether a company is profiled in Part Two, consult the company index on the following page.

Baltimore & Ohio RR Co ..... RR
CHESSIE SYSTEM INC
BOMAINE CORP ..... RR
Boston & Maine Corp ..... RR
BOMAINE CORP
BRANCH INDUSTRIES INC ..... MF

Company Index

The two-letter symbol used after a company indicates the operator chart in which the company appears. All companies printed in upper case are profiled in alphabetical sequence in Part Two.

Glossary

available seat-miles. Standard measure of maximum airline passenger capacity. Number of aircraft seats multiplied by number of miles flown.

Bankruptcy Act—Federal (Section 77). Section of federal law stipulating procedures for resolving problems of railroads unable to meet claims of their creditors. Creditors are essentially prevented from taking possession of property pledged to secure their obligations. The bankruptcy court appoints a trustee to keep the railroad in operation while attempting to restructure the company's debt obligations to the satisfaction of creditors. Holders of equipment trusts, however, are permitted to repossess railroad locomotives and freight cars if the company fails to maintain payments on these securities.

barrel-miles. Measure of oil pipeline traffic. Number of crude oil or petroleum products barrels carried one mile. Twenty barrels transported 100 miles yields 2,000 barrel-miles.

British thermal unit. Quantity of heat required to raise the temperature of one pound of water one degree Fahrenheit. A standard measure used to compare the relative energy content of different fuels.

bulk commodities. Mineral, agricultural or other raw materials which move in large traffic volumes and typically possess a low value relative to their weight.

certificated route carriers. CAB-regulated airlines performing regularly-scheduled service over designated routes. Known as scheduled airlines, these operators are also permitted to perform limited non-scheduled or charter runs.

certificates of public convenience and necessity. Operating certificates issued by regulatory agencies authorizing carriers to perform specified transport service. Applications are granted on the basis of a carrier's financial soundness and the "public need" for the proposed operation. The applicant must demonstrate that it meets both tests in regulatory hearings and carriers already possessing such certificates can protest such requests. Distribution of these operating authorities is a primary means by which regulatory authorities limit the number of firms providing air, rail, truck and gas pipeline transportation.

certificates of value. Federally-guaranteed securities issued by the United States Railway Association (USRA) to the seven bankrupt railroad estates whose property was reorganized into ConRail during 1976. If the ConRail stock initially issued to the creditors of these bankrupt railroads proves to be worth less than the property transferred to ConRail, the USRA will pay any difference to the holders of these certificates.

commodity clause. Provision contained in an amendment to the Interstate Commerce Act known as the Hepburn Act of 1906. No railroad is permitted to transport commodities in interstate commerce that it has produced. This measure was enacted to prevent railroads from charging high rates on certain goods such as coal in which they had a production interest. It has often been suggested that this restriction be applied to ICC-regulated petroleum pipelines.

common carrier. Regulated for-hire carriers which must accomodate all reasonable requests for their transportation services. This service is typically offered over designated routes according to regular schedules and at stipulated rates.

containerization. Generic term for intermodal transport facilitated through the use of standard-size steel boxes which permit rapid interchange of goods by eliminating freight loading and unloading. This technique, first used in truck-rail movements, is now applied to a large number of international shipments of manufactured goods by water.

contract carrier. Regulated for-hire carriers that only serve a limited number of shippers under continuing contracts and at stipulated rates.

deadweight tonnage. Standard measure of a ship's weight-carrying capacity. Calculated by taking the difference between a vessel's displacement when loaded versus unloaded.

domestic offshore shipping. Ocean transport between the mainland United States and outlying states or territories such as Hawaii, Guam and the U.S. Virgin Islands. Also known as non-contiguous coastal shipping, these movements are subject to Federal Maritime Commission regulation.

equipment lease. A method financing the acquisition of transportation rolling stock such as railroad freight cars, airplanes, and tractor-trailers. The transportation company makes rental payments to equipment manufacturers, commercial banks or insurance companies. These lessors retain both title and beneficial interest in the equipment. Consequently, they can repossess the rolling stock in the event of a payment default and also are able to depreciate the equipment. As a result, the interest rate on such leases are generally below that charged on more conventional financing arrangements. These "obligations" do not appear on the operator's balance sheet.

equipment trust. A method financing the acquisition of transportation rolling stock such as railroad freight cars, airplanes, and tractor-trailers. A transportation company pays 20-30% downpayment towards the final purchase price and makes arrangements to finance the remainder. Trust certificates are distributed to investors and a commercial bank typically acts as agent for the issue. The investor retains title to the equipment until the interest and principal are fully repaid. As a result, the encumbered equipment is not subject to the claims of other creditors. The operator, however, retains a beneficial interest which allows it to depreciate the rolling stock. These obligations appear on the company's balance sheet.

exempt carrier. Companies that provide for-hire intercity transport but are not federally regulated because they carry special commodities or conduct limited operations. Trucks hauling unprocessed agricultural goods and inland waterborne vessels transporting less than three bulk commodities in one trip are two important examples.

flag-of-convenience. Registration of ships under the laws of essentially non-maritime countries such as Panama and Liberia. These foreign registeries permit shipowners to construct their vessels in the most economical foreign shipyards, hire cheaper crews from many nations, and also provide anonymity and freedom from more stringent safety standards. While these vessels nominally represent the maritime fleets of foreign countries, a substantial number are actually owned by U.S. shipping interests.

foreign-flag carrier. Ocean vessels or airplanes registered abroad that perform international transportation and are prohibited from providing service between points wholly within the United States. Ships operating under foreign registeries do not necessarily represent foreign economic interests. In fact, three-fourths of the U.S.-owned fleet is registered under foreign flags (see flag-of-convenience).

for-hire carrier. A company that sells transport services to the public and primarily carries goods owned by separate parties.

grandfather clause. Provision allowing companies to be granted certificates of public convenience and necessity if they can prove they have conducted specific transportation operations before enactment of regulation.

interline traffic. Transport movements requiring the interchange of freight between different carriers within the same mode. For example, rail movements from San Francisco to New York where one company provides transport as far as Chicago with another firm completing the haul to New York. Approximately 50% of rail and 40% of truck shipments require this kind of traffic interchange.

joint venture pipeline. Oil pipelines controlled, through a variety of relationships, by at least two integrated petroleum companies. Parents may exercise control through stock ownership or through undivided interests (see undivided interest line). Several important products pipelines and the Alaskan pipeline are organized in this manner.

load factor. Percent of total transport capacity actually utilized in the operations of gas pipelines and airlines. In the case of oil pipelines called "throughput."

operating revenue. A corporation's gross sales. In the case of transport operators does not include revenue from non-transport activity.

operator. Company which directly provides transportation service.

originated tonnage. Standard measure of railroad and motor carrier traffic. Includes only traffic that began on the line of each individual carrier. Does not include tonnage received from other carriers in the same mode. Figure is used to avoid duplications in reporting tonnage arising from interline traffic.

passenger load factor. Standard measure of airline passenger operating capacity. Number of passenger-miles divided by available seat-miles.

passenger-mile. Standard measure of passenger traffic. Number of passengers carried one mile. Twenty passengers travelling 100 miles yields 2,000 passenger-miles.

passenger ton-mile. Measure of airline passenger traffic. Number of passenger tons carried one mile. Each passenger is assigned a standard weight value of 200 pounds. Twenty passengers travelling 100 miles yields 200 passenger ton-miles.

private carrier. Companies that transport their own goods and are generally prohibited from carrying freight owned by separate parties. These companies are not regulated except in the case of gas pipelines. Large manufacturing and mining companies which own or lease trucks to move their products to market are examples of this kind of carrier.

proved reserves. Estimate of known gas or oil reserves that can be profitably recovered under current technology and market conditions.

rate. Price for transportation service described in a tariff. A company must submit this price to a regulatory agency which in turn publishes it for review and discussion by interested parties.

rate bureau. A regional association of transportation companies which provide a collective forum for agreement on uniform rates and tariffs. Rail, truck, and water carrier rates are commonly set by such associations. This practice is protected from antitrust prosecution by an amendment to the Interstate Commerce Act known as the Reed-Bulwinkle Act of 1948. Also known as shipping conferences in domestic and international waterborne transportation.

rebate. Practice whereby a shipper receives a specific transport service below the established rate through kickbacks, special discounts, or under-the-table payments made by the carrier. An amendment to the Interstate Commerce Act known as the Elkins Act of 1903, specifically prohibits this practice.

right-of-way. Transportation routes such as railroad tracks, pipelines, highways, airways and waterways. These lines may be either privately-owned, with access restricted to transportation companies (railroad tracks), or publicly-owned, with access shared by many types of users (highways).

shipper association. Non-profit or cooperative associations that consolidate the small shipments of their members. While acting in effect as freight forwarders, these associations are exempt from ICC regulation.

small shipment. Shipment of any commodity that fails to fill the basic unit of transport such as a railroad car or truck-trailer. Also known as less-than-carload (LCL) railroad freight and less-than-truckload (LTL) motor carrier freight, the ICC defines LCL or LTL freight as any shipment that weighs less than 10,000 pounds.

supplemental carrier. Airlines offering non-scheduled passenger and freight service under CAB-issued certificates. Also known as "non-sked" or charters.

tariff. Published description filed with regulatory agencies of transportation services offered to the public at stipulated rates.

ton-mile. Standard measure of freight traffic. Number of tons carried one mile. Twenty tons of freight moved 100 miles yields 2,000 ton-miles.

undivided interest line. A joint venture pipeline that does not issue stock. Each controlling company treats its section of the system as a corporate division and is allotted a specified quantity of the total pipeline capacity. Tariffs and rates are established by each pipeline owner for goods delivered and transported through the system. A separate non-profit company, jointly-controlled by the pipeline owners, may be organized to operate the pipeline.

U.S.-flag carrier. Ships owned by a U.S.-incorporated company, manned by U.S. crews, registered under the maritime laws of this country and constructed in domestic shipyards.

user-charge. A government tax levied on parties utilizing publicly-financed right-of-ways. Through fuel taxes, weight charges, and tolls, the government collects varying percentages of its costs from different users, such as autos, trucks, and buses.

Introduction

INDUSTRY OVERVIEW

A highly complex, technologically advanced transportation system is necessary in a modern industrial economy. The impact of such a system on the national and world economy is both direct and indirect. Primarily, it provides the means for the physical distribution of goods; secondarily, shipping costs are incorporated in the prices of virtually all goods. For these reasons, the importance of transportation is much greater than its contribution to national income indicates (see Table I). Moreover, the development of a modern transport system has traditionally been treated as a matter of national concern, frequently prompting government action.

This CDE study concentrates on one segment of the total U.S. transportation system—U.S. companies offering domestic intercity and international services to the public. The basic arteries for U.S. domestic and international commerce are within this strategic sector. Automobiles, which are primarily vehicles for private transport, and local systems are both excluded.

I. MODAL ASPECTS

The various transport modes did not become fully developed until recent times.* During the colonial period, coastwise shipping provided the primary means of transport, supplemented, to a limited extent, by an infant turnpike system. After the active promotion of canal development during the first three decades of the 19th century, inland water carriers emerged as the most important means of moving both domestic passengers and goods. Between 1830 and 1870, after decades of intense construction, railroads surpassed water carriers. For nearly 50 years thereafter, the railroad network and the national transportation system were practically synonymous. Perhaps the most notable feature of transportation in the 20th centruy has been the evolution of different modes offering specialized transport services.

A. Freight and Passenger

Today, domestic and international transportation is performed through a variety of modes (see Table II). The freight market consists of two general product classifications: bulk commodities and manufactured goods. The former are mineral or agricultural products that tend to move in large volumes and have a low value relative to their weight. Manufactured goods generally move in small shipment flows and have a high value relative to their freight densities. The distinction between high and low value freight is important since transport pricing has traditionally been based, in part, upon the value of goods carried. Furthermore, certain modes are better equipped to handle high-value goods. Transport speed becomes more important as the value of goods increases, since it generally reduces a shipper's inventory requirements.

B. Market Share

The time when railroads were predominant in the freight market has long since passed. Trucks, offering rapid door-to-door service, travelling over an extensive highway network, and handling a broad scope of manufactured goods, have been the fastest growing element in the freight market. The use of pipelines to move energy products such as oil and gas has also expanded with the nation's growing demand for fuel. Inland water carriers have maintained their position in transporting bulk commodities. Thus while railroads remain an important factor in the total domestic intercity freight market, they have lost a substantial portion of manufactured goods to trucks and bulk commodities to pipelines (see Table III).

The non-automotive domestic passenger market, also once dominated by rail, is now served primarily by buses and airlines (see Table IV). International passenger travel, at one time divided evenly between air and sea, is now dominated by air (see Table V).

These modal traffic shifts have been accompanied by even sharper swings in the distribution of transportation revenues. Modes specializing in non-bulk commodity movements, such as trucks and airlines, have captured a larger share of regulated transport market revenues (see Table VI). Modal redistributions, however, have stabilized in recent years and major new changes are not expected during the next two decades.

C. Intermodal Traffic

A number of transport movements, especially manufactured goods, require the interchange of traffic between different modes. The development of containerization, where freight is packed in a standard-size steel box and sealed until final delivery, facilitates the rapid transfer of goods from ship, rail, and truck by eliminating loading and unloading. Containerization maximizes the inherent advantage of each transport means. Rails provide

* A more detailed account of the structure, economic dynamics, and government involvement in each of the specific transport sectors covered in the Directory appears in the following eight chapters.

 Buses and airplanes are primarily passenger vehicles and international transport is an important feature of movements by air and sea. The transportation sector considered here, however, is primarily dedicated to domestic freight movements. If all forms of transportation are considered, including the automobile, the total national transportation expenditures are about evenly divided between passenger and freight movements. The total market is primarily domestic with less than 5% of the total spent on international movements.

long-distance surface movements, ships perform ocean transport, and trucks specialize in shorter hauls. While containerization first developed in rail-truck movements, its recent growth has since been in ship-rail and ship-truck combinations for international transport.

D. Transport Costs

Transport costs for each mode contain different proportions of fixed (overhead) and variable components. By far the largest single fixed cost is investment in travel routes or right-of-ways. Airways must be developed, railroad track constructed, highways built, and waterways made navigable, all at enormous capital expense. Modes with the greatest percentage of fixed costs utilize privately-owned and maintained right-of-ways—such as pipelines and railroads. Such modes are only economical when operating at high capacities. Highway, air, and water transport, however, operate along public right-of-ways, which are constructed and maintained by federal, state, and local authorities. Government expenditures are recovered through fees linked to use, such as fuel taxes. For these modes, right-of-way costs vary according to the level of traffic.

E. Labor

The degree of labor intensity differs from mode to mode. Expenditures for wages and fringe benefits as a percentage of revenues range from less than 10% for pipelines to nearly 60% for trucks, which account for almost half of total transport employment (see Table VII). Transport labor tends to be highly skilled and employees are frequently represented by relatively powerful unions. Wages are higher than those paid to manufacturing and mining employees but somewhat below those received by construction workers.

F. Energy

All transportation, including the automobile, accounts for nearly one-fourth of total national energy consumption. The transportation sector discussed here, however, consumes less than 9% of the national total. Modal energy consumption ranges from railroads and water carriers, at the low end, to airplanes and trucks which are at the higher level (see Table VIII). Trains and buses, operating at peak loads, are far less energy intensive than autos or planes for intercity passenger travel (see Table IX).

II. FEDERAL GOVERNMENT INVOLVEMENT

As both promoter and regulator, the U.S. government has assumed an active role in the development of transportation through a number of programs that date back to the beginning of the 19th century. Nevertheless, government intervention has not taken the form of direct operations of transportation facilities. To date, underlying all forms of action has been the principle that ownership and management of facilities should remain in private hands.

A. Promotion

By far the largest part of federal aid has been distributed to develop highways, waterways, and airways, with more than $40 billion spent by 1975. Transport companies share these public right-of-ways with automobiles, pleasure boats, and smaller aircraft. All of these users, except for water carriers, are assessed charges designed to recover government costs.

The government has also distributed subsidies and loan guarantees directly to transportation companies. Railroads have been extended large land grants and airlines benefited from mail subsidies. This type of aid, initially advanced to assist newly-emerging modes, now serves to support the otherwise faltering operations of mature sectors. Since World War II, subsidies and loan guarantees have totalled nearly $10 billion, and current trends indicate an escalation in this type of support.

B. Regulation

With the regulation of railroads by the Interstate Commerce Commission in 1887, a precedent was established for the subsequent regulation applied to other modes. Economic regulation of transport is presently performed by four independent agencies which are neither part of the congressional or the executive branches of the federal government, although their budgets and operations are reviewed by Congress (see Table X). When the government determines that the marketplace has failed to equitably and efficiently distribute transport services, it intervenes to insure economic stability and fair practice. In its classic form, the government regulates transport companies as "public utilities." This means that price, market participation, and financial transactions are subject to government review and control to prevent excessively high prices in the absence of competition. Regulation attempts to mitigate the inequities of the market place while retaining private ownership and management. For the most part, railroads, airlines, and natural gas pipelines are subject to a public utility type of regulation (see Table XI). Domestic water carrier and motor carrier regulation, while legally assuming this form, contains numerous and important exemptions that leave most companies untouched by economic regulation.

COMPANY SELECTION

In order to select the largest U.S. transportation companies to be included in this study, the CDE began with a list of those companies which directly provide transportation services, referred to hereafter as operators. Certain types of operators, however, were excluded, such as:

A. Private Carriers: These operators move goods which they own and are generally prohibited by law from transporting goods owned by other parties. Large manufacturing and mining companies, for example, commonly have corporate divisions which operate trucks and ships to transport their own goods to domestic and international markets. (Major private trucking and U.S. international water carrier fleets are listed in tables in sector chapters covering these modes.)

B. Exempt Carriers: Operators providing for-hire transport but carrying only special commodities or conducting limited operations are exempt from regulation. Trucks hauling unprocessed agricultural goods and inland water carriers transporting no more than three bulk commodities during one trip are examples of exempt carriers. Since these operators are unregulated, systematic and reliable financial information concerning their transportation activities is not available.

C. Certain International Carriers: Included in this category are air and sea operators incorporated abroad and active in U.S. foreign commerce. Some major U.S.-incorporated international water carriers may also have been omitted because the Federal Maritime Commission, which regulates such operators, does not make public relevant information which it collects.

These exclusions particularly affect the trucking and water carrier sectors (see Table XI). For the most part, the excluded trucking operators are private carriers which, strictly speaking, are not transportation companies. In the case of international and domestic shipping, some large for-hire operators could not be identified and, therefore, are not included in this study. However, the CDE did cover a sector traditionally excluded from the transportation industry—natural gas pipelines. Its inclusion affords an opportunity to make comparisons with oil pipelines.

The CDE, therefore, began with a list of the largest regulated operators for each sector, ranked by their revenues for the year ending December 31, 1974. Although these companies represent only a fraction of the total number of operators, they generate the bulk of regulated revenues for the transportation industry (see Table XII).

CDE OPERATOR CHARTS

The CDE next determined a revenue cut-off point for the sample operators to be included in its study. The objective was to include the largest operators within each mode as well as a sufficient number so that as a group they accounted for a significant portion of total sector revenues. In applying these two criteria the CDE took into account the average size of the companies and the degree of corporate concentration within each sector. As a result, different cut-off points were used in each mode and varying numbers of operators were selected. In all but one sector—motor carriers of freight—the CDE Sample Operators account for more than a majority of total sector revenues (see Table XIII). The 194 sample operators, ranked by revenues, are listed in the respective CDE Operator Charts which appear at the beginning of each sector chapter.

Many operators are subsidiaries or divisions of other corporations. A few are joint ventures. As a first step in this study of the ownership structure of the industry, each operator was surveyed to determine whether it was owned by or was a division of another corporation. The CDE defined any corporation which owned 40% or more of an operator's voting stock as a parent. In many cases these corporate relations had to be traced back through intermediaries to reach the ultimate parent.* For easy reference, all the parents identified by this survey are listed with their operators in the CDE Operator Charts.

The identification of parents allowed the CDE to more accurately measure the degree of corporate concentration within each transport mode. By combining commonly-owned operators and attributing their revenues to their ultimate parents, substantially higher levels of concentration were found in two sectors (see Table XIV).

Finally, from these lists of operators and parents, the CDE selected those companies which are profiled in Part Two (see Introduction to Part Two). Whenever a profiled company is referred to in the Directory, its corporate name is printed in UPPER CASE letters.

* In one exception, the DANIEL K LUDWIG INTERESTS, the parent was defined as a conglomerate of interests privately owned by one individual. The complex structure of certain parent/operator relations have been diagrammed in the corporate profiles of Part Two.

 In the case of water carriers, a list of the major operators and their ultimate parents could not be compiled in this manner. The Federal Maritime Commission does not publish the information required to identify the largest operators subject to its jurisdiction. Consequently, the CDE reversed its selection process, first identifying companies with significant shipping activities, and then listing operating subsidiaries wherever possible. Thus the parents were ranked according to their total shipping-related revenues, or, when these figures were not available, according to the total deadweight tonnage of their fleet.

Railroads

I. INDUSTRY STRUCTURE

A. Classifications

In this study, we examine railroad operating companies which directly originate, connect and terminate intercity traffic.* Since all railroad transportation is regulated by the Interstate Commerce Commission (ICC), the Commission's statistics provide complete industry coverage. For statistical and regulatory purposes, the ICC classifies railroad companies according to size: Class I is assigned to carriers with operating revenues exceeding $5 million, while smaller operators are given a Class II designation.

B. Transport Geography

With over 200,000 miles of main track, the railroad system extends into every region of the continental U.S., forming a nationwide grid. Since all individual carriers operate within regional areas, so that regional and national transit requires cooperation among independent lines, goods may originate on one line, pass through another and terminate on a third. This interline traffic represents one-half of all rail shipments and accounts for approximately 70% of total freight revenues.[1]

The U.S. railway system is divided by the ICC into three geographic areas: Eastern, Southern and Western. The Eastern and Southern Districts encompass the area east of the Mississippi River with the Ohio River and Virginia/North Carolina border serving as the north/south dividing line; the Western District lies west of Chicago. At year's end 1974, the 69 Class I railroads were assigned to the ICC districts as follows: 30 to the Eastern, 10 to the Southern and 28 to the Western.

C. Concentration

There are more than 300 railroad companies, ranging in size from the billion-dollar corporation to the less than million-dollar company. Class I railroad companies represent less than 10% of the 300 corporations, but they predominate in terms of employment, track operated and traffic carried (see Table RR-I). These Class I carriers vary in size from the diminutive Minneapolis, Northfield and Southern ($5 million in revenues) to the giant Penn Central Transportation Co. ($2.4 billion in revenues).

A general historical trend toward concentration is evident in the industry since the beginning of this century (see Table RR-II). Since 1957, the industry has experienced a new wave of railroad consolidations as larger companies acquired the stock of, or merged with, other carriers. As a result, most of the Class I railroad companies currently reporting to the ICC are subsidiaries of other corporations.*

When market share percentages are calculated by consolidating the revenues of commonly-owned operators, it is apparent that a handful of large railroad companies account for most of the industry's revenues. In 1974, the 12 largest railroad companies had combined revenues of $14 billion, representing 80% of the total industry's revenues (see Table RR-III). A similar pattern of concentration is evident within each rail district. For example, the three largest railroad carriers within each district had 85% of the Eastern, 97% of the Southern and 50% of the Western revenues.[2]

D. Corporate Structure

The organization of KANSAS CITY SOUTHERN INDUSTRIES in 1962 marked the beginning of a new corporate trend in the railroad industry: the diversified holding company or so-called railroad conglomerate. Diversification is a response to the chronically low return on railroad investment. Through development of non-rail income sources, the railroad holding companies seek to even out cyclical rail earnings and expand into potentially more profitable areas. Potential regulatory impediments to diversification are, in part, circumvented through the formation of holding companies, which are not directly subject to ICC regulation.

Five years after the creation of KC SOUTHERN INDUSTRIES, railroad carriers under the control of multi-faceted holding companies had operating revenues of $1 billion, or 10% of 1967 Class I revenues. By 1972, holding companies controlled railroad operators with $6.8 billion in revenues, or 50% of the Class I total revenues; when companies indirectly controlled are included, this figure increases to 57%. By 1974 at least one company went the diversification route to become a conglomerate (IC INDUSTRIES), with another 10 firms deriving at least 20% of their revenues or 10% of their incomes from non-transportation sources (see Table RR-IV).

Because of the industry's financial troubles, the activity of diversified holding companies is under scrutiny. Critics claim that the holding companies use income from railroad operations to diversify out of the industry, as well as contribute to a financially weakened railroad industry through high dividend payments, property transfers and other financial transactions. In an effort to support or refute such criticisms, the ICC is now investigating the financial relations between railroad subsidiaries and their holding companies.

Although it is a Class I railroad, the NATIONAL RAILROAD PASSENGER CORP (Amtrak) is not assigned to a regional district.

* Of the 42 railroad operators on the CDE Railroad Operator Chart, 33 are subsidiaries of other corporations (see Operator Chart).

Those advocating railroad diversification contend that it compensates for low rail earnings, and point out that diversification had been based primarily upon the use of assets not directly employed in railroading (such as landholdings). Thus the cash position of railroad subsidiaries is not adversely affected by the holding company's activity; on the contrary, the publicly-held holding company with a mix of income sources is more attractive to the equity market than is the traditional railroad company. Since the outlook for the holding companies is not tied solely to the fortunes of railroading, diversified corporations are more able to weather the financial downturns of the railroad industry.

II. ECONOMIC DYNAMICS

A. Market Trends

The transportation advantages inherent in railroading are well recognized. By employing equipment with enormous horsepower, and travelling along an exclusive right-of-way with little friction, goods can be transported great distances, expending a minimum of energy. Railroads are more energy-efficient than trucks when heavier loads or longer distances are involved. A fully loaded freight train travelling across main line track is three to four times more efficient than a truck. Water and pipeline transport possess similar efficiencies but cannot accommodate the wide-variety traffic moved by rail.

Railroads are an essential artery of commerce for a developed industrial economy. In terms of energy conservation, land use, safety and environmental impact, railroads offer a desirable alternative to other means of transport. Nonetheless, the industry has declined during the past thirty years. Rail share of the intercity freight market has dropped and growth of revenues has lagged behind that of other transportation modes.

Rail passenger traffic, the most obvious and extreme example of a fading market, is no longer an important revenue source for private operators (see Section II-C). Hence, the future of the industry (as it is presently organized) lies in its capacity to compete for freight carriage.

B. Traffic Composition: Freight

Even within the freight market, railroads lack a competitive advantage in certain areas. Motor carriers have taken a dominant position in the shipment of manufactured or consumer goods. Shippers of these goods are willing to pay higher transportation costs in return for faster and more flexible service. These commodities tend to move in more frequent shipments of smaller volume, conditions better suited to motor carriage. Increasingly, such traffic is bound for growth centers--suburban areas and newly-developed regions--where rail facilities are lacking.

Railroads are still competitive in the bulk commodity freight market. Products of the mining, agriculture and forestry industries move in large volumes and great weights. Because of regional specialization of raw material production, they also tend to travel longer distances. Thus bulk commodities provided 60% of tonnage and 40% of gross revenues for the railroad industry in 1974 (see Table RR-V and Table RR-VI).

Coal is the single most important commodity transported by rail, representing 25% of originated tonnage and 11% of gross freight revenues. The Eastern roads are particularly dependent on this traffic, with 20% of their revenues derived from coal shipments. Though less important to Southern roads, coal is responsible for 12% of their revenues. In addition to coal, other important commodity groups include field crops (wheat and corn), industrial chemicals (sodium and phosphate), primary iron and steel, transportation equipment (motor vehicles) and grain mill products (see Table RR-VII).

In spite of water carrier competition in certain regions, the railroads have successfully maintained their market share of bulk commodity shipments.[3] However, these historical generators of rail freight are a declining share of the Gross National Product. The general economic shift toward service and high-technology industries is reflected in the transportation market in the shift towards lighter-freight densities and consumer goods. Consequently, the railroads' share of the intercity freight market has fallen from 56% to 38% between 1950 and 1973 (see Table RR-VIII). Similarly, growth in rail revenues has not kept pace with that of other transportation revenues (see Table RR-IX).

C. Traffic Composition: Passenger

When it was the pride of the railroads, passenger service contributed over 20% to total revenues. In 1920, a banner year for rail travel, 1.2 billion passengers were carried 47 billion passenger-miles.* In following years, however, rail passenger operations contracted in response to competition from automobiles, buses and airplanes. By 1973, passenger traffic declined to 255 million passengers travelling 9.3 billion passenger-miles, generating less than 4% of total railroad revenues (see Table RR-X).

As passenger traffic diminished, companies pared costs by reducing train schedules, which in turn contributed to further erosion of traffic demand. Doubting that trains could ever again profitably compete for passenger traffic, railroad companies requested relief from chronic operating deficits through service abandonments or subsidies.

Potentially, railroads offer an attractive means of travel. In terms of fuel consumption, speed, safety and land use, rail passenger service can make a significant contribution to a modern transportation system. Consequently, the federal government acted to check further decline in rail travel by creating Amtrak in 1970. Thus, the revitalization of the nation's rail passenger network now rests with the federal government (see Section III-B).

* Passenger-miles is the number of passengers carried one mile.

D. Labor

Mechanization is a major trend in railway economics, resulting in growing labor productivity as measured by the Bureau of Labor Statistics. However, increasing labor productivity has not been accompanied by commensurate opportunities to expand total labor output. Thus labor-saving technology has the net effect of reducing total employment needs. Also contributing to falling industry employment has been the declining importance of particularly labor-intensive railroad services, such as passenger transportation and shipment of freight requiring substantial terminal handling.

Railroad employment declined 57% in a 23-year period, from 1.24 million in 1950 to 533,000 by 1973. While total employee compensation increased during this period, labor's percentage of operating revenues dipped slightly from 48.5% to 47.9% (see Table RR-XI).

Unions have been an integral part of railroading for more than a century. More than 30 unions, organized primarily along craft lines, represent various categories of railway workers. In an attempt to coordinate and strengthen their bargaining power, four railroad brotherhoods were consolidated into the United Transportation Union in 1969.

Given the industry's shrinking employment, job security has been the primary issue in labor-management relations. By the mid-1950's, the unions were successful in including job protection provisions in labor contracts. Adherence to traditional work assignments, crew size regulations and job security clauses are essentially a means of preventing future employment erosion. It is these "work rules" that have generated charges that railway unions prevent the industry from realizing savings made possible by available technology.

E. Technological Changes

During the past 30 years, major improvements in rail technology have been introduced, resulting in more powerful locomotives, automated train monitoring systems, and mechanization of work functions.* Consequently labor productivity in intercity railroad transportation increased at a rate exceeding manufacturing between 1947 and 1974.[4] The development of new freight train technology represents the most potentially important recent industry innovation. Since traditional train service failed to adapt to changes in the freight market, manufactured or consumer goods are increasingly transported by motor carriers. However, piggyback train service, also known as containerization, provides the railroad industry with a means to compete profitably for such traffic.

Piggyback freight movements utilize trucks for shipment pick-up and delivery, and railroads for longer-haul transport. At the point of shipment, piggyback freight is loaded into a truck trailer (or container) which is then sealed. When the truck arrives at the railroad terminal, the trailer (or container) is placed on a railroad flatcar. At the other end of the rail movement, the trailer (or container) is then hooked up to a truck for final delivery. Time-consuming and expensive loading/unloading of freight between truck trailer and railroad freight car is avoided.

Piggybacking was first offered as a regular train service in 1954. Since that time it has grown into a significant railroad operation. Between 1955 and 1974, carloads of piggyback freight as a percent of total freight cars loaded increased from .4% to 4.7% (see Table RR-XII). Currently, piggyback freight movements account for 5.7% of total Class I freight revenues.[5]

F. Financial Performance

During the past 30 years, the railroad industry's earnings have been below those of other transportation modes and the manufacturing sector. This low return on investment is the source of the industry's financial troubles. In 1974 the industry earned 4.3% on its investment, compared to a return of 5.8% for the entire transportation industry, 10.4% for public utilities, and 15.4% for the manufacturing sector (see Table RR-XIII).

Internally-generated funds fail to cover the costs of capital expenditures; consequently, railroads must rely on external sources of funds. Between 1956 and 1970, railroads raised more than $11 billion in external funds, with debt financing accounting for 95% of this total (see Table RR-XIV). The almost exclusive use of debt has resulted in rising interest payments and erosion in equity relative to total capitalization (see Table RR-XV).

A growing percentage of railroad long-term debt is composed of equipment obligations—a method of financing the purchase of locomotives and freight cars. Creditors retain title to the equipment until the obligations are fully repaid. Unlike other long-term debt payments, those on equipment debt are not suspended by the Courts during bankruptcy proceedings.

Because of this special security, equipment obligations have become the major form of railroad debt. Representing 35% of total rail debt in 1964, equipment obligations now account for almost 60%.[6] While equipment debt is essential to railroad financing, it has complicated the problem of railroad bankruptcies. Traditionally, railroad bankruptcies are resolved through capital restructuring; however, equipment debt cannot be refinanced or payments suspended. As these obligations represent a growing percentage of total debt, capital restructuring becomes a less viable means of resolving railroad bankruptcies.

Interest rates on borrowed capital now exceed the rate of return on railroad investment. Since World War II, net railway operating income (NROI)—the money available for fixed charges, dividend payments, and reinvestment—has been sensitive to cyclical variations. At the same time, fixed charges have steadily increased. A steady flow of income from non-rail sources (non-operating income) has been viewed as crucial to the industry in maintaining its interest coverage ratio (see Table RR-XVI).*

* These innovations include: increased diesel-locomotive horsepower, automatic switching and signalling systems, mechanization of track maintenance, and use of computers to perform clerical work.

There are two kinds of piggyback service: trailer-on-flatcar (TOFC) and container-on-flatcar (COFC). Currently, railroad piggyback freight movements predominantly use TOFC.

* It is not clear how much of the industry debt has a claim to non-railway income and therefore how much of this total income (NROI + non-operating income) should properly be viewed as providing interest coverage to total debt.

It should be noted that many of these industrywide financial trends are influenced by averaging in the operations of the seven bankrupt northeast railroad carriers. Since 1970, these railroad operators have been in bankruptcy, including the largest U.S. railroad--the PENN CENTRAL. While these financial trends are less severe in other railroad regions, a generally deteriorating financial situation is nevertheless evident. In both the Western and Southern districts, the rate of return has been below the "fair return" of 6% stipulated by Congress (see Table XVII). Furthermore, railroad bankruptcies are not confined to the seven northeast carriers--a handful of other operators are currently undergoing bankruptcy proceedings.

Responding to the northeast bankruptcies and acting to bolster the railroad system throughout the rest of the country, the federal government has reformed the Interstate Commerce Commission to create a more flexible regulatory mechanism; created Amtrak to remove the burden of passenger deficits; sponsored ConRail to reorganize the northeast railroads into a financially viable system; and delegated authority to the Department of Transportation to plan and administer federal aid to the national railroad system.

III. GOVERNMENT INVOLVEMENT

A. Economic Regulation: Interstate Commerce Commission

Railroad regulation originated in the economic conditions of the industry during the last half of the 19th century. As the dominant mode of inland transportation, railroads enjoyed monopolies in certain regions. For many Western farmers, a rail line represented their only link to the market. Along major freight routes, on the other hand, several rail cartels engaged in price wars in an attempt to achieve a superior position. Farmers demanded government protection from rail monopolies, and some members of the industry saw government intervention as a way to achieve economic and financial stability.

Eighteen eighty-seven marked the creation of the Interstate Commerce Commisssion, whose purposes were to prevent shipper discrimination, monopoly pricing, and curb predatory pricing. Subsequent legislation molded the Commission into an independent administrative tribunal with extensive powers of rate review, financial oversight and market control. Its regulation of the railroad industry became a model for the subsequent regulation of other transportation modes.

Few industries are as pervasively regulated as railroad transportation. This regulation is justified on several grounds. First, technology itself appears to prevent competitive organization of the industry. Large investment in track and equipment acts as a formidable barrier to market entry, and operations are most efficient when conducted on a large scale. Secondly, the nature of freight routing requires the cooperation of separate corporate entities. Some regional and most interregional freight movements involve the interchange of cars among independent lines, thereby requiring agreement on joint freight rates and other charges related to the collective use of privately-owned freight cars. Finally, since rail service is perceived as essential to the general economic welfare, the public interest may require the continuation of unprofitable operations.

Recent conditions in the railroad industry have put ICC regulation in a new perspective. Once the sole ongoing government instrument of rail policy, the Commission is now one of several federal bodies with railroad responsibilities. Created in 1966, the Department of Transportation (DOT) took over the technical and safety-related regulation formerly performed by the ICC. More recently, the DOT has become actively involved in the rehabilitation and rationalization of the industry. Secondly, the United States Railway Association was established in 1973 to implement the federal reorganization of the northeast carriers into ConRail. Finally, Congress has been more directly involved in the revitalization of the national railroad passenger system since Amtrak began its operations. (See Table RR-XVIII for a chronology of government involvement in railroad transportation.)

Responding to criticism that the Commission has contributed to the rail problem, Congress directed that certain regulatory practices be changed. The Rail Revitalization and Regulatory Reform Act of 1976 gives carriers greater pricing flexibility and promises a faster regulatory response to proposed mergers or consolidations.

Limiting the Commission's use of its rate suspension power, Congress provided railroad companies with greater freedom to set rates.* In changing the basis for determining minimum reasonableness, carriers will now have greater freedom to lower their rates. Similarly, the Commission is restrained from suspending a proposed increase when the carrier involved does not exercise "market dominance", as defined by the ICC, for the affected service. Generally, the Act establishes a zone of reasonableness under ICC rate regulation within which a carrier can lower or raise rates by 7% within one year.

The Commission is also required to develop more stringent standards in its regulation of railroad rate bureaus. These modifications are designed to minimize the bureaus' power to adversely affect competitive rate making. The bureaus can no longer participate in single-line rate proposals or intervene in Commission rate hearings in order to protest independent action by one of their members. Collective action on interline rates is to be limited to carriers that can actually participate in the affected service.

Proposed acquisitions or mergers of rail lines require the approval of the Commission. In the past this often involved excessive regulatory delay. Carriers objecting to the proposed consolidation could indefinitely extend the ICC hearings.[7] Now the Commission is required to reach a decision within specified deadlines. In a newly created merger procedure, the Department of Transportation will become involved in the Commission review, and in this case a decision must be reached within two years (see Section III-D).

* Rate changes must be published and filed with the ICC. The Commission can suspend the effectiveness of a rate proposal in order to investigate its lawfulness. In the event of a suspension, the Commission has seven months to determine whether the rate is too high or too low.

 Rate bureaus are regional carrier associations created to achieve collective agreements on rate proposals. They are specifically exempted from antitrust prosecution by the Reed-Bulwinkle Act of 1948.

Although the Congressional reform of the Interstate Commerce Commission was based on the principle that market forces should exercise a greater influence in rate-making, the Commission's basic regulatory functions remain intact. Recent legislation does not indicate a new trend towards deregulation of the industry. On the contrary, as discussed in the following sections, the government has become more deeply involved in the railroad industry.

B. Passenger Service: Amtrak

The NATIONAL RAILROAD PASSENGER CORP (Amtrak) represents a government commitment to revitalize rail passenger service. Created in 1970, the Amtrak system consists of more than 24,000 miles of track, representing all but a handful of the national intercity passenger routes. Government support of passenger service through Amtrak was instituted to check the precipitous decline in rail travel. After several decades of operating deficits attributed to passenger operations, railroads sought ICC permission to sharply curtail or abandon unprofitable passenger train service. In both 1969 and 1970, with passenger losses estimated at $200 million, railroad companies had neither the commitment nor, in some cases, the funds, to attract new passengers through service improvements.[8] In creating Amtrak, Congress removed a financial burden from private railroad companies and committed the government to a specific program of promoting rail travel.

Amtrak is a federally-funded corporation that operates on a for-profit basis—that is, it does not represent federal ownership of a passenger railroad. Legally, Amtrak is a private corporation, since all of its common stock is owned by four private railroad companies. In practice, however, it functions as a government corporation. The President appoints a majority of the Board of Directors, and Amtrak must regularly report to the Congress on its operational and financial progress.* The government exercises corporate control because of its financial support of Amtrak, whose operating deficits are covered by federal operating grants; the government, moreover, lends its credit to Amtrak borrowings. Amtrak will retain its character as a government agency until it becomes financially self-sufficient.

Amtrak does not directly operate a passenger railroad, except along the Boston to Washington passenger route, but rather it contracts for passenger train service from private railroad operators. The quasi-government agency does own the locomotives and passenger cars. Also, the more than 8,000 Amtrak employees operate a national ticket and reservation system, provide on-board train service, and perform some train repairs and maintenance. Private railroad companies provide train crews, railroad track and maintenance for the Amtrak-owned equipment. Contracts stipulate the services to be provided by private railroads as well as Amtrak's payments for passenger train operations. Amtrak incurs operating deficits whenever passenger revenues fail to cover the cost of contracted service.

The Amtrak strategy to revitalize passenger service is based upon the purchase of modern rail equipment to provide a comfortable transportation service at greater speeds. While Amtrak has improved the comfort of rail travel, expanded train service, and achieved better on-time performance, a dramatic increase in ridership has not been forthcoming (see Table RR-XIX). The 17.4 million passengers carried in 1975 represents a 9% increase from 1972 but is down from the 1974 level.

At the same time, Amtrak does not appear closer to operating on a for-profit basis. During its first four years, Amtrak has accumulated operating losses totalling more than one billion dollars. At present, the Corporation is averaging a yearly deficit of $300 million.[9] However, a judgement of Amtrak's financial performance must take into account its relatively brief history and the Corporation's special service obligations. A significant part of Amtrak's operating deficit, for example, results from rural and overnight train operations conducted for social reasons.

The benefits of modern rail transport are expected to be realized in the federally-funded Amtrak project to upgrade service along the Boston to Washington passenger route, also known as the Northeast Corridor. The reorganization of the bankrupt northeast rail carriers into ConRail has given Amtrak the opportunity to directly operate a passenger railroad. Purchasing the track and roadbed from ConRail, Amtrak will use more than $1.6 billion to renovate track and purchase rail equipment so that train speeds exceeding 100 miles per hour can become a reality. With one of the major impediments to service improvements under its control (40% of Amtrak's reported train delays were attributed to poor track conditions), Amtrak's Northeast Corridor service is expected to attain average speeds of 75 miles per hour. At these speeds, Amtrak trains would offer city-to-city travel with transit time nearly equal to air service.

The greatest promise of the Northeast Corridor Project is its potential contribution to increase Amtrak patronage. Currently almost half of the system's passengers ride Amtrak trains between Washington and New York. Increased service reliability and reduced travel time should enable Amtrak to increase its share of this traffic, turning the Northeast Corridor trains into a profitable operation. Presently, Amtrak's Metroliner trains (a special service between Washington, D.C. and New York) have passenger revenues which come within 10% of its costs. If the new train service proves to attract more customers, the Northeast Corridor trains could be generating operating surpluses.

Other intercity passenger routes also generate dense traffic flows over medium-length distances (e.g., Chicago to Milwaukee, San Diego to Los Angeles, etc.). Extension of high-speed passenger train service into other regions will require substantial expenditures for new equipment and track renovation. If other corridor projects are to be implemented in the near future, federal financing will be necessary. Hence, expansion of high-speed passenger service on a national basis will depend upon substantially increasing the federal government's commitment to Amtrak.

The federal government continues to be the decisive force in the creation of a viable rail passenger system. Thus the future of rail travel will largely be a function of political attitudes on energy consumption, the environment and the government's role in providing transportation services.

C. Northeast Rail Reorganization: ConRail

1. Financial Failure

The financial troubles of the railroad industry hit hardest those carriers operating in the northeast region. In 1970 four eastern railroads declared bankruptcy, including the PENN CENTRAL, the largest railroad in the United States. Subsequently, four more carriers failed, so that by 1972 28,000 miles of track, representing more than 10% of the national system, were operated by bankrupt carriers. The spread of financial failure in the region became the industry's most serious problem since the Great Depression.

Traditionally, railroad bankruptcies are settled according to the Federal Bankruptcy Act (Section 77). The distinguishing feature of this law is that vital rail services may not be disrupted because of bankruptcy. Specifically, creditors are prevented from seizing property to settle unpaid claims. Essentially, the process provides for a debt restructuring, with creditors typically accepting new stock and debt issues in exchange for unpaid interest and principal. When the reorganization plan is approved by a majority of security holders, the railroad emerges from bankruptcy.

However, the northeast bankruptcies were not solvable through such traditional debt restructuring. A large proportion of the debt, in the form of equipment obligations, could not be refinanced (see Section II-F). Holders of funded debt, moreover, could not agree upon a satisfactory reorganization plan. It did not appear that creditors' claims could be satisfied through new securities issues or an extension of debt repayment period. In general, the financial community did not believe that the situation of the eastern railroads could be reversed without some form of government assistance.

After three years of reorganization hearings, the railroad bankruptcies seemed no closer to settlement. Even with the suspension of debt payments, the bankrupt companies could not meet immediate operating expenses, and a move to liquidate the railroad estates now seemed possible. The federal government therefore intervened to prevent the probable disruption of vital rail service in the industrial northeast.

2. Federal Intervention

The Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 prescribed federal intervention in the northeast rail bankruptcies. The government committed itself to the creation of a financially self-sustaining rail system capable of providing adequate and efficient service throughout the region. A government agency, the United States Railway Association (USRA), was formed to restructure the northeast rail industry and provide federal funds to rehabilitate and modernize the deteriorating rail network.

To reorganize the industry, the USRA designated certain rail properties of the bankrupt estates to be transferred to other interests. Profitable railroads, Amtrak, and state, regional, and local authorities were given an opportunity to acquire sections of the bankrupt system. A new company, Consolidated Rail Corporation (ConRail), was specifically created to receive and operate rail property assigned to it by the USRA Plan. The rail properties to be affected by the government-assisted reorganization included those of the Ann Arbor, Erie Lackawanna, Lehigh Valley, PENN CENTRAL, Lehigh and Hudson, READING, and Central of New Jersey.[10]

When the USRA Plan was implemented (with passage of the Railroad Revitalization and Regulatory Reform Act of 1976), most of the rail properties were transferred to ConRail. The State of Michigan purchased the Ann Arbor Railroad and Amtrak acquired the Boston to Washington passenger corridor. However, few profitable railroad companies sought acquisition of substantial sections of the bankrupt system.[11] Representing a merger of six bankrupt railroads, ConRail began operations on April 1, 1976.

3. Capital Structure

ConRail was created to avoid a rail nationalization and is organized as a privately-owned for-profit corporation. The major task confronting the new corporation is the modernization of its aging rail facilities. Its success largely depends on recording significant operating efficiencies and achieving marked service improvements within five years. During its early years, ConRail will rely upon the federal government for most of its financing. According to USRA projections, by 1980, ConRail will generate an increasingly larger positive cash flow, if it achieves the level of savings and revenue growth contained in the government forecast.[12]

The Railroad Revitalization and Regulatory Reform Act authorized the USRA to invest up to $2.1 billion in ConRail securities. Acting as the government's banker, the USRA will monitor ConRail finances, appoint a majority of the Directors and report to government agencies on ConRail progress. Representing a purchase of ConRail debentures and series A preferred stock, the government investment carries liberal repayment terms. So that money can be immediately applied to capital expenditures and initial operating deficits, interest and dividends will be paid on a cash-available basis. Both securities have a rate of return of 7.5%, considerably below that required by private investors. As security for its billion-dollar investment, the government will exercise effective corporate control until its investment is substantially repaid (see Table RR-XX).

In devising ConRail's capital structure, the USRA Plan provides for private ownership. As part of the compensation package for property transferred to the Corporation, the bankrupt railroad estates, and ultimately their creditors, received ConRail securities. While private interests hold preferred and common stock issues representing ultimate ConRail ownership, their securities are subordinate to government-held issues. If the government reorganization is successful, future ConRail benefits and control will pass to the private investors. Until that time, payments on privately-held securities and major executive decisions will be subject to government approval.

4. Legal Dispute

ConRail received the property of the bankrupt rail estates free and clear of mortgages and liens.* The trustees of the bankrupt estates and, in turn, their creditors, received ConRail securities as compensation for property transferred. Since the value of these securities is uncertain, the USRA issued certificates-of-value as part of the estates' compensation. These certificates are government guaranteed obligations to pay any difference between the value of transferred property and the value of ConRail securities distributed to the rail estates. However, the value of rail property, and hence the government's maximum liability, was not stipulated by Congress in legislating the reorganization. Consequently, the USRA and the railroad estates are engaged in a major legal dispute to determine the government's liability in reorganizing the northeast railroads.

All parties to the dispute are presenting their arguments before a special three-judge federal district court. The first matter to be resolved is selection of a valuation method to determine the property's worth. The various proposed methods yield substantially different estimates. The USRA arrived at a $685 million figure based upon an estimate of what the railroad property would bring if dismantled and sold at auction (net liquidation value). On the other hand, the railroad estates claim that the transferred property is worth between $4 and $10 billion. The lower estimate is based on the market price of the property if sold to a profitable railroad, the higher figure is calculated according to the cost of rebuilding the railroad at current prices. After the Court selects a method that is "fair and equitable," in the "public interest," and at a "constitutional minimum," a team of investigators will inspect all the properties and catalogue values for them.[13]

The government's maximum liability as represented in the certificates-of-value is not necessarily equal to the Court-determined valuation of rail property. The Court will decide if the railroad estates suffered "compensable unconstitutional erosion" arising out of the government's intervention in the bankruptcy proceedings.[14] If additional compensation is warranted, this amount will be included in the certificates.

More than a hundred lawyers are involved in the case representing the USRA, the seven bankrupt estates and their creditors. After the valuation and distribution of ConRail securities and USRA certificates to the bankrupt estates, an equitable distribution among the various creditors must also be worked out. Given the inevitable appeal to the Supreme Court and a possible appearance before the Court of Claims, a settlement will require at least five and possibly ten years.

The ConRail legal dispute will receive the careful attention of the financial community and government representatives. The major issue is a determination of the government's financial responsibility to private creditors when it intervenes in such reorganization proceedings. If creditors receive a higher settlement because of federa intervention, in future cases the government may consider nationalization. On the other hand, a lower settlement may affect the flow of private capital into certain regulated industries.

D. Revitalization and Rationalization: Department of Transportation

While implementing the northeast rail reorganization in 1976, Congress also acted to prevent a decline in rail service within other regions. Only a handful of companies earn a return on investment large enough to attract sufficient private financing. Therefore, some roads have not been able to maintain or modernize their rail property. Unnecessary duplication of facilities and excess capacity further diminish the industry's financial strength. In order to revitalize and rationalize the national rail network, the Department of Transportation (DOT) is authorized to provide federal financing of plant rehabilitation and to develop plans for promoting rail consolidations.

By 1977, the Secretary of Transportation will submit a final report to Congress detailing the physical condition of the U.S. rail network and finances required to maintain essential facilities. The report will identify the vital core of the present network based upon criteria of traffic density, profitability, and local alternatives to rail transport (Traffic Density Analysis). Congress will also receive an estimate of expenditures deferred because of inadequate finances and a projection of the industry's capital needs from 1976 to 1985 (Capital Needs Study). These two studies will form the basis for distributing federal rail assistance and planning rail consolidations.

With more than $1.6 billion available for rail improvements, the federal government will become a major source of rail capital. Railroad companies will apply to the DOT in order to receive government assistance. To be eligible, the companies will be required to show that the money will be used for necessary maintenance work, equipment purchases or other capital improvements that cannot be privately financed.[15] If the DOT approves the proposed project, the aid will be offered either in the form of a government purchase of a special stock issue or as a federal guarantee attached to the company's private borrowing.

Government aid is offered on liberal terms so that the money can be immediately applied to the project. For financially weaker railroads, the DOT will purchase redeemable preferred stock issued to it by the company. As an equity investment, the government assistance will not add to the company's debt burden. Dividend payments do not begin until the tenth year after the issue, and the company can take up to 30 years to repay the investment. In other cases, the government will lend its credit to private borrowing of the eligible railroad company. With a federal obligation to fully repay the private loan in the event of a default, the company can borrow money at reduced interest rates.

Unlike government support of Amtrak and ConRail, rail improvement aid does not require federal involvement in corporate management. As protection for its investment, the DOT requires that a company agree to certain restrictions concerning dividend payments and use of assets or revenues for non-rail purposes. In the event of a default on the preferred stock or guaranteed obligation, the Secretary of Transportation has the right to appoint representatives to a company's Board of Directors.

Rationalization of the U.S. railroad system has been an objective of government rail policy for more than 50 years. Essentially, this has meant the promotion of rail consolidations to eliminate duplication of facilities and to achieve efficiencies based on large-scale operations. While previous attempts to coordinate rail consolidations have not succeeded, the recently authorized involvement of the Department of Transportation is expected to result in a substantially restructured industry.

As early as 1920, the government attempted to coordinate rail consolidations when it directed the ICC to create a plan that would reduce the number of companies. The government plan sought to create approximately 20 railroad systems of comparable strength. This balanced route approach meant proposing combinations of weak and strong lines—something stockholders of stronger railroads would not approve. None of the proposed consolidations were realized, and by 1940 ICC approval of merger applications no longer had to conform to an overall plan.

At the close of the 1950's, the industry went through a period of active consolidations. Between 1957 and 1974, the ICC received 142 rail unification proposals, a majority of which were eventually approved.[16] The number of companies was reduced and several large carrier systems were born, including: BURLINGTON NORTHERN, NORFOLK AND WESTERN, CHESSIE, and PENN CENTRAL.

The bankruptcy of the PENN CENTRAL illustrated the problem with the government's ad hoc approach to rail mergers. In part, the consolidation of the Pennsylvania and New York Central railroads was a defensive response to previous regional consolidations. The mergers and acquisitions that produced the NORFOLK AND WESTERN led to Chesapeake and Ohio's acquisition of the Baltimore and Ohio. Both of these combinations produced strong roads with access to coal traffic, the most important revenue source for the region. As a merger of two weaker roads, the PENN CENTRAL failed in less than three years.

Because of the Railroad Revitalization and Regulatory Reform Act, the Department of Transportation will become involved in coordinating rail mergers. In its study of the U.S. rail system, the Department will also investigate the restructuring of the industry, including possible recommendation of consolidations. The Act also provides for DOT involvement in ICC review of merger proposals. Railroad companies can now approach the Department with their proposals; if approved, the application is forwarded to the ICC, and the Commission must then make a decision within two years.* Finally, the Department may use its control over the $1.6 billion rail aid fund to stimulate mergers that conform to its plan.

* The time limit for Commission decisions is designed to avoid lengthy regulatory proceedings which tend to discourage consolidations.

TABLE RR-XVIII. Chronology of Government Involvement in Railroad Transportation, 1830-1976

Date	Event	Comment
1830-1840	State and local government action	State and local governments provide financial assistance to early rail lines.
1850	Illinois Central Act	Federal government turns over national lands to states which in turn grant land to railroad companies building lines between Missouri River and Appalachian Mountains.
1864	Pacific Railway Act	Federal assistance to transcontinental rail lines established. Includes large grant of national land, subsidy bonds and loans.
1867-1887	State legislation	Responding to pressure from farmers opposed to rail monopolies, state legislatures establish railroad regulatory commissions.
1887	Interstate Commerce Act	Federal regulation of railroads established superceding state efforts to regulate interstate railroads.
1900-1915	Elkins Act (1903) Hepburn Act (1906) Mann-Elkins Act (1910) Panama Canal Act (1912)	Interstate Commerce Commission becomes an independent administrative tribunal. Given power to regulate rates, require companies to file annual reports and issue binding orders to prevent shipper discrimination. Railroad companies' ownership of competing water carriers prohibited.
1916	Adamson Law	Legislative recognition of railway workers' right to eight hour day.
1917-1920	Federal Railroad Administration	Invoking war emergency powers, federal government assumes control of railroad industry to meet war time transportation needs.
1920	Transportation Act of 1920	Private control of railroad companies resumed. Railroads regulated as public utilities. ICC control over market entries and abandonments. Financial transactions subject to Commission review. ICC instructed to draw up master plan to reduce number of railroad companies through consolidations.
1926-1934	Railway Labor Act (1926) Railway Labor Act (1934)	Establishes federal mechanisms to resolve labor-management disputes. Provides for mediation and arbitration.
1933-1936	Emergency Railroad Transportation Act (1933) Washington Agreement (1936)	Provides measures to protect railway workers from displacement due to railroad consolidations.
1936-1938	Railroad Retirement Act (1936) Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act (1938)	Establishes a system for railroad social security and unemployment insurance.
1940	Transportation Act of 1940	ICC instructed to consider impact of its rate regulation on all modes under its jurisdiction. Abandonment of ICC master plan on mergers.
1948	Reed-Bulwinkle Act	Rate Bureaus exempted from antitrust prosecution.
1958	Transportation Act of 1958	ICC prohibited from holding up rates of one mode to protect another. Extended Commission authority to order abandonment of passenger service. ICC administers government guarantee on loans to finance equipment purchases.
1966	Department of Transportation Act	Created cabinet-level transportation department. DOT coordinates work of several administrative transportation agencies; develops national transportation policy; suggests appropriate level of federal transportation aid; assumes safety regulation and promotes technical research.
1970	Rail Passenger Service Act	Government-supported NATIONAL RAILROAD PASSENGER CORP (Amtrak) created to revitalize passenger service.
1973	Regional Rail Reorganization Act	United States Railway Association created to develop government planned re-organization of bankrupt northeast carriers.
1976	Railroad Revitalization and Regulatory Reform Act	Government-financed ConRail assumes operations of six bankrupt carriers. Department of Transportation administers federal funds to finance equipment purchase and road rehabilitation. Federal subsidies for continuation of unprofitable freight and commuter lines established. ICC rate reform allows greater freedom in rate making.

Motor Carriers Freight

I. INDUSTRY STRUCTURE

A. Classifications

Intercity trucking is a highly differentiated economic activity that can be divided into two broad classes of carriers: private and for-hire. Private carriers own or lease trucks which are used to transport their own goods. Transportation is not their primary activity and they are prohibited from carrying goods owned by another party. On the other hand, for-hire carriers are enterprises transporting freight owned by a separate party.

For-hire trucking is conducted by common, contract, and exempt carriers (see Table MF-I). Intercity common and contract carriers are subject to the economic regulation of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Common carriers offer their transportation services to the general public. These services may be conducted either along designated routes according to a regular schedule (regular route service) or as non-scheduled operations between designated points or within a specified region (irregular route service). Contract carriers, on the other hand, serve a limited number of shippers under continuing contracts. Both common and contract carriers operate under certificates that either permit them to carry a wide variety of commodities (general freight carrier) or grant them authority to carry certain commodities (specialized carrier) requiring special handling or equipment, such as household goods or hazardous materials.

Exempt carriers either transport special commodities or are engaged in limited operations specifically excluded from ICC regulation. For example, transportation of unprocessed agricultural commodities is exempt.

In this introduction we discuss common and contract carriers subject to ICC regulation (regulated carriers). Such companies account for 42% of the intercity ton-miles transported by all trucks.* The unregulated sector of the trucking industry must largely be excluded from this discussion because information on its operations is not readily available. This is especially true in the case of exempt carriers, which are, for the most part, small operators. On the other hand, private carriers include a number of large truck fleets. Some of these carriers are subsidiaries or divisions of large corporations in the petroleum, manufacturing, and retail industries. For example, Montgomery Ward and Ashland Oil own or lease more than 5,000 trucks to transport their products (see Table MF-II).

B. Transport Geography

The federal-aid highway system forms an extensive transportation grid that interconnects all major centers in the United States. Most motor transit between major centers of economic activity uses the 40,000-mile national system of interstate highways and the 17,000-mile urban highway network. Rural districts and smaller communities are linked to this primary system through more than 600,000 miles of federal-aid secondary roads.

The geographical scope of individual operators is restricted to areas specified in ICC-issued certificates. As a result of consolidations and acquisitions of operating certificates, a few large trucking companies can offer regional or in some cases transcontinental freight service. However, a sizable number of regional and national shipments require the interchange of freight between independent carriers. These interlined shipments comprise approximately 40% of the total number of regulated shipments.

C. Concentration

Traditionally, trucking has been carried out by a large number of small firms. This fragmented corporate structure is a function of the cost characteristics of motor carrier transportation. It is generally recognized that there are no compelling economic reasons for increasing company size such as large fixed investment or economies of scale.[1]

In 1974, there were more than 14,000 regulated motor carriers; 75% had less than $500,000 in annual operating revenues. The four largest operators had 9.80% of the regulated industry revenues and the top eight had 14.33% (see Motor Carrier Operator Chart). When market shares are calculated by combining the revenues of commonly-owned operators, the four largest carrier systems had 11.42% of total revenues and the top eight had 16.47% (see Table MF-III). While regulated motor carrier transportation remains one of the least concentrated industries, a trend indicating growing consolidation is evident.

Between 1950 and 1974 the number of regulated trucking companies dropped from 19,597 to 14,648 (see Table MF-IV). Sources within the industry expect this number to fall to 10,000 in another decade. As the number of firms declined, individual companies have become larger. As a result, the ICC has changed its criteria for size classification. Class I carriers, a designation assigned to the largest companies, must now earn at least $3 million in operating revenues. In 1945, revenues of at least $200,000 were sufficient for a Class I designation.

As a group, the Class I carriers are increasing their share of the regulated trucking revenues. Between 1960 and 1973, Class I share of total revenues increased from 66% to 80% (see Table MF-V).

This pattern of increasing concentration is variously explained as the economic dynamics of a maturing industry or as the artificial product of government regulation. These views are part of a more general debate concerning the cost/benefit aspect of ICC trucking regulation (see Section III-B).

D. Corporate Structure

Because most motor carriers are relatively small companies, they are not generally organized as corporations with publicly-held stock. Of the more than 14,000 trucking firms in the regulated sector, less than 1% are publicly-held. However, these publicly-owned corporations tend to be the largest operators and generated nearly 30% of the regulated industry's revenues in 1972. Between 1950 and 1973, the number of public corporations has more than doubled.

Corporate mergers and acquisitions are common in the trucking industry. As indicated in the accompanying Motor Carrier Operator Chart, several carriers are affiliates or divisions of other corporations. On the one hand, non-transportation enterprises are acquiring motor carriers; on the other hand, larger operators have taken over smaller firms. As of 1972, the ICC reported that carriers controlled by non-transportation companies had 12% of total Class I revenues.

A number of corporate acquisitions are the indirect result of ICC regulation. Motor carrier service is limited to the authority granted under ICC operating certificates. Because operating franchises restrict service to designated points, a trucking operator seeking to expand service into new areas must obtain additional service grants from the ICC. This method of expansion can involve lengthy Commission hearings in which approval is uncertain. To avoid this, a company will often choose to acquire an existing trucking firm and its ICC operating franchise. Consequently, the operating franchise is probably the most important asset for most motor carriers (see Section III-B).

II. ECONOMIC DYNAMICS

A. Market Trends

The demand for all categories of motor carrier transportation has expanded at a rate exceeding that for the general freight market. In the past twenty years, these carriers increased their share of the total intercity freight market fourfold; by 1973 nearly 23% of the total intercity ton-miles was transported by truck (see Table MF-VI).

The regulated sector alone, which accounts for approximately 42% of the total truck ton-miles, recorded a similar growth record.* Between 1955 and 1973, the revenues of regulated carriers grew faster than the national income (see Table MF-VII). During the last two decades, motor carriers' share of total dollars spent for all regulated transportation rose from 35% to 55% (see Table MF-VIII).

Several factors in the economy have contributed to the motor carriers' capacity to compete in the freight market. To some extent this growth is a product of expanding industrial output. More significantly, the vigorous expansion of the trucking industry is a result of traffic diverted from the railroads. The extension of the national highway system gave the industry connections to all major markets as well as outlets to rural districts and small communities. The decentralization of industry and population created new traffic-generating areas that could be more conveniently serviced by truck. Consequently, the flow of freight now moves in smaller volumes, over shorter distances, and is bound for more dispersed destinations. Hence traffic for which motor carriers enjoy a comparative advantage is a growing part of the freight market.

Furthermore, evidence suggests that motor carrier growth is not limited to short-haul traffic. The average shipment of Class I common carrier travels 280 miles. According to one estimate, 74% of all common carrier shipments of at least 10 tons move more than 200 miles and 57% of these shipments travel more than 300 miles.[2] At these distances, it is generally estimated that railroads can offer a cheaper transport service. Apparently, shippers are willing to pay higher prices for motor carrier transportation in return for faster service.

B. Freight Composition

Small shipments are the most important revenue sources for the motor carrier industry. In 1972, these shipments generated 50% of Class I carrier revenues (see Table MF-IX). While truckload shipments of other commodities (such as food, chemicals, and automobiles) are also important revenue sources, trends in the small shipment market are of special importance to the motor carrier industry.

Competition from motor carriers has practically forced the railroads out of this market. Motor carrier LTL service generally eliminates the extra terminal handling required in rail LCL movements.† Between 1950 and 1974, motor carriers increased their share of total small shipment tonnage from 61.4% to 83.6%. During the same period, rail LCL tons fell from 25.5% to less than 1% of the total market (see Table MF-X).

These figures do not include the operations of a special small parcel carrier, the UNITED PARCEL SERVICE (UPS).[3] With more than one billion dollars in operating

* Unless otherwise indicated, the ensuing discussion will focus exclusively on the operations of the regulated trucking sector.

 Otherwise known as less-than-truckload (LTL) motor carrier freight and less-than-carload (LCL) railroad freight. As defined by the Interstate Commerce Commission, a small shipment is a shipment of any commodity that weighs less than 10,000 pounds.

† Trucks can generally be loaded at the shipper's terminal and directly deliver the freight to the buyer. In contrast, LCL traffic requires that the shipment be delivered to a railroad terminal, loaded onto the train for long-distance haul, loaded back onto a truck at the other end of the passage, and then delivered to the buyer.

revenues, UPS is the largest regulated motor carrier. In less than ten years, UPS volume grew by almost 700%. In 1974 UPS handled nearly four times the tonnage carried by the U.S. Government Parcel Post Service and seven times that transported by the now defunct Railway Express Company (see Table MF-X).

In recent years, the small shipments carried by commercial airlines and air freight forwarders grew at a rate second only to that of UPS. Presently, air freight represents 3.2% of total small shipment tons but generates 12.8% of the market's revenues. In future years, air freight service could be the most serious competition for motor carriers' small shipment traffic.

C. Labor

Between 1960 and 1974 employment in the total trucking industry recorded a growth exceeding that for all other transportation modes. Regulated and unregulated carriers employed 42.8% of the total transportation personnel in 1974, whereas in 1960, the industry's share was 33.6% (see Table MF-XI). During this same period, Class I motor carrier employment increased from 327,000 to 580,000 (see Table MF-XII).

Labor productivity in intercity trucking improved along with the expansion of the work force. Between 1950 and 1974, productivity (as measured by the Bureau of Labor Statistics) increased by 48%. This increase is greater than that for all private industry, equal to that recorded by the manufacturing sector, but below productivity gains recorded in other transportation modes (railroads, oil pipelines and airlines).[4]

In 1972, the trucking industry paid an average wage per employee of $12,782, a rate 8.3% higher than that paid to all transportation workers. The payrolls of Class I intercity common carriers of general freight represented 52.8% of operating revenues in 1972; fringe benefits (social security, welfare benefits, and workmen's compensation) accounted for another 7.4%.[5] In recent years, wages have represented a steady share of operating revenues while fringe benefits have increased (see Table MF-XIII).

Conditions of trucking employment are determined through labor-management agreements facilitated by the combined associations of employers and employees. Through their affiliation with the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, 450,000 trucking employees negotiate a standard national contract under the National Master Freight Agreement. Similarly, employers improve their bargaining position through associations, the largest being the Trucking Employer, Inc. representing 16,000 trucking firms.

The most recent three-year contract, signed in mid-1976, removed the ceiling on cost-of-living (COLA) payments contained in the previous agreement. Payments in the new contract will compensate for one-half to two-thirds of the erosion in real wages caused by inflation. Wage and fringe benefits will increase by 30% over the three-year period.[6]

D. Technological Change

The construction of the interstate highway system provided the most important basis for improvement in trucking technology. Eliminating traffic lights and reducing mileage between major centers, the new highways sharply reduced the time required to transport goods by trucks. Furthermore, with its reinforced bridge structures, durable road surfaces, and wider traffic lanes, the federal-aid highway system permits trucks to pull longer trailers and carry heavier loads.

During the past twenty years, trailer length has steadily increased. In 1956, only 6.7% of the trailers produced were longer than 36 feet; by 1974 93.7% reached that length and 41.8% were at least 45 feet long.[7] Another method of increasing cargo capacity per truck is the use of double bottom rigs, which are two trailers pulled by one truck. For example, by linking together two 27-foot trailers, cargo capacity is increased 35% and operating efficiency is improved by an estimated 25-30% over the standard 40-foot trailer.[8] State highway regulations now permit the use of twin trailers in all but 15 states.

In addition to increasing trailer length, cargo capacity is further expanded through the use of better insulating materials. With thinner trailer walls, interior width is increased by two inches. As a result of these improvements, the average load per Class I intercity common carrier has increased from 9.7 tons in 1955 to 12.87 tons in 1972.[9]

E. Financial Performance

As an expanding industry with a record of financial return comparing favorably to that of other industries, regulated trucking has attracted growing interest within the public securities market. Changes in corporate structure, such as the acquisition of carriers by non-transportation enterprises and the growing number of publicly-held companies, are a product of this financial performance.

Regulated trucking is one of the few transportation industries whose revenues grew faster than national income during the past twenty years. Class I motor carriers generated a net income (after taxes) of $427 million in 1973, representing more than a fivefold increase over the 1955 figure (see Table MF-XIV).

Given motor carriers' slim operating profit margin (operating expenses represent 95¢ of each revenue dollar), they are particularly susceptible to economic downturns or sudden increases in operating expenses (e.g., fuel price increases). Nevertheless, over the long haul, revenue growth has offset these problems and thereby maintained the industry's profitability. Thus Class I carriers earned a return on investment averaging more than 13% between 1969 and 1973 (see Table MF-XV).

III. GOVERNMENT INVOLVEMENT

A. Highway Development

The national system of interstate highways provided the trucking industry with the means to compete in the intercity freight market. Construction of this extensive network required more than $300 billion in government support since 1921, with more than half of this amount expended during the last twenty years. While these costs are borne by local and state governments as well as the federal government, the latter is decisive in highway development.

Federal aid to highway programs began in 1916 with passage of the Federal Road Act. After World War I, the mass introduction of automobiles led to greater pressures for road extensions and, in subsequent legislation, the federal government deepened its commitment to highway development (see Table MF-XVI). In particular, the Federal Highway Act of 1944 signaled the federal government's commitment to construct a national system of interstate highways connecting all major economic centers.

The Federal Highway Act of 1956, in creating a Highway Trust Fund, established even more extensive federal participation in road construction and improvements. Taxes levied on motor vehicle fuel and supply purchases, combined with a special tax on buses and larger trucks, are deposited into the Federal Fund. With this separate source of financing, road programs can count upon a stable level of support and do not have to compete with other federally-funded transportation programs on a yearly basis.

Managed by the Federal Highway Administration, highway trust funds are distributed to state highway departments for authorized road projects. Work on the 42,500 mile interstate system is financed on a 90% federal and 10% state basis. On the remaining sections of the federal-aid system, costs are financed on a 70% federal, 30% state basis.

Highway development has been supported by a variety of economic interests. Automobile users, real estate interests, and local communities have all pushed for road construction. At the federal level, the most powerful force is the "highway lobby" representing the interests of the trucking, petroleum, automobile and construction industries. The combination of these forces has kept the Highway Trust Fund intact, thereby insuring that road construction remains a high priority in federal transportation policy.

Some observers contend that this aid amounts to a subsidy of truck operators.[10] In a 1969 study, the Federal Highway Administration (FHA) concluded that heavy diesel-powered trucks fail to contribute their share of federal highway expenditures.[11] In response to these critics, the American Trucking Association (ATA) asserts that the FHA study employed a questionable methodology in allocating highway costs. Furthermore, the ATA argues that the trucking industry contributes more than its share of highway costs at all levels of government (including state and local).[12]

As a result of the changing political opinion concerning the national transportation policy, the Highway Trust Fund is subject to growing controversy. In particular, environmentalists and mass transit advocates assert that money in the Fund should now be applied to more pressing transportation needs. As a partial result of this pressure, the Federal Aid Highway Act of 1973 permits the limited use of Trust Fund resources for mass transit purposes.

Opposition to the present level of highway aid also includes the Department of Transportation (DOT). During several administrations, money authorized by Congress for highway purposes was not released to states by the Department. At the end of fiscal 1975, the Trust Fund had accumulated a $9 billion balance in unspent funds. The DOT claims that state highway departments cannot efficiently spend highway money at currently authorized levels. While continuing the government's commitment to complete the interstate system, the Department is seeking sweeping changes in the level of federal highway aid.*

Highway supporters contend that moves to hold up or divert Trust Fund money will put completion of the interstate system far behind schedule. A slowdown in highway construction will not only hinder road improvement, they add, but will also contribute to additional unemployment. Furthermore, they assert that it is unfair to expect highway users to finance other federal spending programs.

B. Economic Regulation

In 1935, regulation by the Interstate Commerce Commission (ICC) was applied to the motor carrier industry. During the 1930's, the trucking industry experienced its first wave of expansion. Despite intense competition, frequent bankruptcies and sometimes unreliable service, the industry managed to capture an increasing share of the intercity freight market. Both railroads and a number of trucking companies petitioned for government regulation to curb predatory competition.

Motor carrier regulation, patterned after existing railroad controls, assumed that all transportation modes should be subject to the same treatment by government authorities. Congress therefore directed the ICC to insure that trucking service would be available to all shippers at reasonable rates, while at the same time preventing the duplication of services and excess capacity associated with destructive competition. Through its power over carrier rates and its authority to limit market participation, ICC regulation stabilized the economic conditions of the motor carrier industry.

From its inception, however, trucking regulation has been a subject of controversy. In recent years, the ranks of regulatory critics have been growing. They argue that government regulation results in higher rates, fosters increasing concentration, and promotes inefficiency in the form of circuitous routes. On the other hand, proponents of current regulation, led by the American Trucking Association (the major representative of regulated motor carriers), point out that under present government policy the industry has experienced vigorous growth. Competition is present, rates are reasonable, and service quality is high, they assert, because of the ICC-induced economic stability. It is claimed that alteration of the present system could spawn predatory competition leading to financial turmoil and a consequent decline in transportation service.

1. Rate Regulation

Rate regulation is the most complicated and controversial of the regulatory issues. Rates are either set by individual motor carriers or by collective agencies of trucking companies called rate bureaus. A proposed rate must be first published and filed with the ICC. The Commission may suspend a rate's implementation and within a seven-month investigation period either rule it unlawful or declare the rate effective.

* Under a Ford Administration proposal, only part of the present federal 4¢ a gallon fuel tax would go into the Trust Fund; 1¢ would continue to be used for highway purposes; 2¢ would be deposited into the general Treasury Fund; and, at the option of individual states, the final cent would either become an all purposes state tax or would remain as federal revenue to be used for general purposes.

Rate bureaus are specifically exempted from anti-trust prosecution by the Reed-Bulwinkle Act of 1948. Their supporters contend that they perform a practical and necessary service by reducing the number of tariffs and rates that must be filed with the ICC and by providing a forum for agreement on joint rates and services.* Furthermore, they point out that member firms retain the right to take independent action and that interested parties, including shippers, may participate in bureau hearings.

Critics argue that rate bureaus exert a powerful influence over the rate-making process, resulting in higher transportation charges. Collective rate-making is said to discourage intra-modal price competition. Rate bureau member firms know that any proposed rate will apply to their member competitors so that advantages to be gained from price decreases are minimized. Independent action, it is also asserted, is not an effective counter-balance to rate bureau power. While carriers may file rates independently, a protest from the bureaus can lead to their suspension by the ICC. With their full-time staff and substantial budgets, the bureaus are said to be in a much better position to bear the costs of an ICC hearing than are small companies.

The ICC's rate suspension power is its primary mechanism for regulating prices. With its ability to suspend and investigate rates, the Commission has the power to insure that rates are reasonable and non-discriminatory. According to its proponents, the ICC's rate powers are sufficient to protect against excessive or predatory pricing. They also point out that rate regulation provides a forum for all interested parties, including motor carriers, shippers, and rate bureaus.

On the other hand, critics charge that these powers are not an effective check on potential rate abuses. They assert that given the large number of rates filed annually, it is impossible for the Commission to undertake an independent review of each proposal. In practice, therefore, the ICC must largely exercise its rate review in response to protests from interested parties. Since the smaller trucking firms and shippers cannot always afford the costs of an ICC hearing, critics claim that the Commission's rate review works to the advantage of the bigger trucking firms, rate bureaus, and larger shippers.

Critics also argue that minimum rates permitted under current regulation can be lowered even further without jeopardizing the financial viability of the industry. Furthermore, they claim that these lower rates would result in more efficient utilization of equipment.

2. Market Entry Control

Excessive competition in the trucking industry during the 1930's provided the rationale for ICC regulation. To maintain stable competitive conditions, the Commission limits the number of companies through its distribution of "certificates of public convenience and necessity." A company seeking to enter the regulated trucking market must prove that there is a public need for such service. These certificates proscribe the commodities, routes, and points that can be served.

Under a "grandfather clause," a company that could prove it conducted a particular trucking service on June 1, 1935 was entitled to a certificate as a matter of course. But after the initial distribution of operating authorities, it became increasingly difficult to acquire an operating franchise. Now a firm must demonstrate not only that it is capable of providing the proposed service but also that this service will not endanger or impair existing carriers.

Defenders of ICC market control say that it is necessary to prevent a recurrence of the chaotic conditions of the 1930's. They claim that the operating franchise system does not unduly restrict competition or present a closed door to new entrants. Cited as evidence are the large number of existing carriers in the regulated sector and the number of favorable ICC decisions on new operating franchise applications.

Despite the large number of regulated carriers, the critics say that operating certificate restrictions limit the actual transportation of similar commodities between specific points to a few firms. In its exercise of market control, the Commission is seen as protecting those carriers which have received the most lucrative routes under the present system. Furthermore, these market restrictions are claimed to contribute to inefficient energy consumption when operating certificates do not allow a carrier to use the most direct route between two points.

3. Deregulation Prospects

Some change in the economic regulation of the motor carrier industry seems likely. Critics of ICC trucking regulation now include a number of transportation economists, consumer advocates and the Department of Transportation. The suggested changes range from complete deregulation to ICC reform. Railroads may once again be a factor in motor carrier regulation. Recent Congressional reform of certain railroad regulatory procedures may be used as a precedent for similar changes affecting the motor carrier industry. (See Railroad Introduction, Section III-A, for a discussion of these reforms.)*

* Motor carriers must publish tariffs (description of service offered to the public) and rates (charges for specific service).

* The Department of Transportation (under the Ford Administration) has proposed legislation, the Motor Carrier Reform Act (H.R. 10909; S. 2929), that would limit rate bureau activity, relax ICC entry controls, provide more flexible ratemaking by carriers, and permit, on a limited basis, exempt carriers to haul freight that would normally require ICC approval.

	REGULATED BY ICC		UNREGULATED BY ICC[1]
	Common Carrier	Contract Carrier	Exempt Carrier
Service Stipulation	Must offer service to all shippers	Service offered to few shippers under continuing contracts	There are two types of exemptions: a) commodity (see freight below) and b) service (see route/ schedules below)
Freight	General Freight or Specialized Commodities		If exemption is based on commodities hauled then carrier may only transport specified goods (e.g., unprocessed agricultural goods, newspapers, etc.)
Routes and Schedules	A: Non-schedule runs between designated points or within designated areas B: Fixed-schedule operations along designated routes		If exemption is based on service then carrier limited to local trucking and delivery (e.g., air freight forwarding trucking)

TABLE MF-XVI. Chronology of Government Involvement in Motor Carrier Transportation, 1916-1973

Date	Event	Comment
1916	Federal Road Aid Act	Money is appropriated to states for highway improvement along routes used by Postal Service.
1921	Federal Aid Highway Act	Federal money is provided to states for highway purposes on continuing basis. Projects are financed on a 50% state, 50% federal basis.
1935	Motor Carrier Act	Established federal regulation of the trucking industry. Patterned after its regulation of the railroads, ICC given power to regulate rates, control market entries and oversee financial transactions.
1944	Federal Aid Highway Act	Commitment of federal aid to construction of a national system of interstate and urban highways.
1948	Reed-Bulwinkle Act	Rate Bureaus exempted from antitrust prosecution.
1956	Federal Aid Highway Act	Established a Highway Trust within federal government. Projects within the designated federal-aid primary system are funded on a 90% federal and 10% state basis.
1966	Department of Transportation Act	DOT assumes responsibility for administering federal highway aid and implementing federal truck safety standards.
1973	Federal Aid Highway Act	Permits limited use of Highway Trust Fund resources for mass transit projects.

Motor Carriers Passenger

I. INDUSTRY STRUCTURE

A. Classification

In 1974, there were 950 motor carriers providing intercity, local, and suburban passenger transportation, as well as charter and other special services. Since 1960, the number of operators has gradually declined from 1,150, while total industry revenues have more than doubled, reaching $1,145 million in 1974. The 80 Class I carriers which primarily serve the intercity market accounted for approximately 80.8% of total revenues (see Table MP-I).*

B. Concentration

Three carriers dominate the whole industry: Greyhound Lines Inc, Continental Trailways Inc, and Transport of New Jersey. Twenty seven of the Class I carriers which report to the Interstate Commerce Commission are owned by these three transportation systems. Together they accounted for 77.61% of all Class I revenues in 1974 (see Table MP-II). This high degree of concentration is not due as much to the economies of scale associated with bus line-haul technology as to the economies of scale of terminal operations, scheduling, and interchanging of passengers.[1]

The origins of these three companies, and the emergence of the industry as such, go back to the 1920's, when the growth of the interstate highway system made intercity passenger transportation competitive with railroads. The development of the industry was promoted by the major bus manufacturers. General Motors, for instance, assisted in the formation of GREYHOUND in 1926, was its largest stockholder until 1948, and remains its sole supplier of buses.[2] Bus operators, and GREYHOUND in particular, established their major routes by offering service parallel to railroad lines, forcing the railroads to enter joint bus ventures, and to abandon their own passenger service on branch and main lines. These joint ventures were later bought out by the motor carriers. Most of the industry's subsequent expansion, and the continuing trend toward concentration, has resulted from the acquisition of smaller operators by the larger carriers.

* This figure does not include Class I carriers which serve primarily local and suburban areas, such as Transport of New Jersey, the third largest operator. The 96 Class I carriers which reported to the ICC in 1974 accounted for approximately 92% of total industry revenues.

C. Corporate Structure

All three major transportation systems are subsidiaries of diversified companies. GREYHOUND CORP diversified from its bus operations into other lines of business in the 1960's. On the other hand, Continental Trailways was acquired by HOLIDAY INNS INC in 1969, and Transport of New Jersey has been a subsidiary of PUBLIC SERVICE ELECTRIC & GAS CO since 1948.

II. ECONOMIC DYNAMICS

A. Market Trends

While intercity passenger transportation grew by more than 250% between 1950 and 1972, the bus volume of intercity passenger-miles dropped off sharply in the late 1950's and barely regained its 1950 level by 1972. The bus share of the market correspondingly fell off from 5.20% to 1.97% during the same time period (see Table MP-III). Buses do have a distinct competitive advantage over railroads due to the flexibility of scheduling smaller operating units and the ability to attain near-capacity load factors on high volume routes.[3] Most of their market share loss, however, is attributable to competition from airlines and the private automobile.

B. Labor

Intercity bus employment grew quickly throughout the early 1950's but only matched the growth rate of total transportation employment thereafter (see Table MP-IV). Drivers, mechanical and maintenance workers, and terminal employees of most major carriers are members of the Amalgamated Transit Union (AFL-CIO).

C. Financial Performance

Intercity passenger transportation has been a profitable business in comparison with other modes of transportation. Net income of Class I carriers grew from $18 million in 1950 to a peak of $64 million in 1971. Their return on investment has been only slightly inferior to the performance of motor carriers of freight (see Table MP-V).

Small and large carriers, however, have not shared equally in the growth of the industry. Smaller carriers are concentrated in short haul and/or low density areas and cannot subsidize losses in these services with profitable long-haul routes or charter operations. Larger carriers which serve predominantly local and suburban areas, such as Transport of New Jersey, face a similar problem. Passenger-mile costs for trips under 50 miles are estimated to be 50% greater than for trips over 200 miles.[4] Consequently, while GREYHOUND and Continental Trailways accounted for 70.77% of all 1974 Class I revenues, they received 87.95% of net income. These two companies carried only 31.76% of all passengers but accounted for 69% of the bus miles operated by Class I carriers (see Table MP-II). On the other hand, Transport of New Jersey, which has reported net losses for several years despite state subsidies,[5] carried 38% of all passengers.

D. Competition from Amtrak

The performance of the intercity bus industry as a whole has been declining since 1971, its most profitable year. It is strongly debated whether its financial problems are due to the initiation of services by NATIONAL RR PASSENGER CORP (Amtrak) in 1971. In 1975, bus operators, through the National Association of Motor Bus Owners, waged a national advertising campaign against federal subsidies for Amtrak. The railroad claims that they actually compete on only a small portion of their respective systems and that the buses are indirectly subsidized through the federal highway system. In a few instances, Amtrak and bus companies have agreed to coordinate their transportation services between areas in which they do not compete. Amtrak competition, as well as the growth of competitive charter service by non-regulated operators, raises a degree of uncertainty about the immediate future of the industry.[6]

Airlines

I. INDUSTRY STRUCTURE

A. Classifications

In this introduction we discuss the operations of airlines regulated by the Civil Aeronautics Board (CAB). Intrastate airline operations are not federally-regulated and several sizeable carriers operate solely within one state. The largest of these airlines, PSA INC, is included in this Directory (see Airlines Operator Chart).

CAB-regulated carriers are grouped into two broad classes: certificated route ("scheduled airlines") and supplemental route ("non-scheduled airlines"). Scheduled airlines operate under certificates authorizing regular passenger and freight service over designated routes. Non-scheduled airlines conduct freight and passenger charters.* Unless otherwise specified, this introduction will speak only of the scheduled airlines, which generate nearly 95% of passenger traffic.[1]

Scheduled airlines can be divided into several sub-classes according to the special nature of their services. The trunk line carriers fly between the major domestic and international traffic centers; local service carriers primarily serve smaller, regional city traffic; and all-cargo lines specialize in freight transport. While all three carrier types may conduct some form of international service, the two major international carriers, PAN AMERICAN and TRANS WORLD AIRLINES, account for the bulk of U.S.-flag international service.

B. Transport Geography

Air carriers offer expansive transportation services along the more than 400,000 miles of federal airways.[2] In addition, U.S. airlines fly to nearly every major international center. Domestically, the scheduled airlines serve more than 400 communities within the 48 continental states.[3] Approximately 58,000 city pairs—routes between two cities—receive regular air service with more than 70% of all passenger-miles flown between 908 of these travel routes.[4] The four largest air traffic hubs of Chicago, New York, Atlanta, and Los Angeles, accounted for 28% of 1974 passenger boardings (see Table AL-I).

C. Concentration

At year's end 1974, there were 35 airlines subject to CAB regulation. A dozen large carriers, however, accounted for the bulk of revenues and traffic generated by regulated companies. The largest 4, 8, and 12 operators earned 48.00%, 75.66%, and 86.84% of the 1974 revenues respectively (see Airline Operator Chart). By the same token, these large carriers also generated the bulk of airline passenger-miles with the top 4, 8, and 12 accounting for 53.31%, 82.18%, and 93.22% of the 1974 total respectively (see Table AL-II).

D. Corporate Structure

During the formative period of aviation development (1915-1935), the predecessors of today's major airlines were subsidiaries of holding companies controlled by major aircraft manufacturers. These companies hoped to develop markets for their aircraft products through the promotion of air travel. In 1934, aircraft manufacturers were forced to divest themselves of their airline interests by the Black-McKeller Act. Since that time, airlines have been primarily organized as publicly-held corporations.

At year's end 1974, none of the major trunk lines shared common corporate connections. Of the 26 largest air carriers, only three were subsidiaries of non-transportation companies (see Airline Operator Chart). However, a number of large carriers have formed holding companies to advance diversification which has been typically directed into areas horizontally related to air transport. Hotels, food services, and restaurants are currently the most favored areas for new investment. A number of companies have developed non-airline interests to the point where they represent approximately 10% of revenues or income (see Table AL-III).

II. ECONOMIC DYNAMICS

A. Market Trends

Air transportation has become the dominant mode of intercity passenger transportation. The famed original "Kitty Hawk" flight engineered by the Wright brothers occurred in 1903, but it was not until 1914 that regular passenger service was inaugurated. An infant airline "industry" emerged by the 1920's primarily for mail transportation. While passengers were occasionally carried, they were of secondary importance to an industry that depended upon mail subsidies for economic survival (see Section III-B). During the next two decades, however, it became evident that the future of air transportation depended upon passenger traffic, and by 1940, the industry generated $60 million in passenger revenues.[5] World War II disrupted commercial air traffic, but it also marked a technological watershed from which the modern airline industry has developed.

The airline industry grew at a rapid rate between 1950 and 1970. Operating revenues increased more than tenfold and traffic expanded at an even faster pace, moving from 1.4 billion ton-miles to 20.2 billion ton-miles.* During the same period, the number of passengers increased by more than eight times while passenger-miles expanded thirteen-fold (see AL-IV).

During most of the decade 1950-1959, air transportation was primarily an alternative for passengers who had previously travelled via first class railroad and water carrier service. While airlines offered regularly-scheduled coach service as early as 1948, the majority of passenger-miles continued to be generated by first class travellers until 1960 (see Table AL-V). In 1957, airlines for the first time generated more passenger-miles than railroads, buses, and water carriers.[6]

The industry, anticipating continued traffic growth, placed large orders for jets during the mid-1950's. These new jets allowed continued rapid expansion of total available seat-miles during the 1960's.[7] The new planes carried more passengers, faster and farther, at decreasing costs. As a result, airline fares, in constant dollar terms, steadily declined between 1950 and 1970 and the mass market for air transport continued to expand. By 1970, coach- and economy-fare passengers generated more than 80% of the industry's total passenger-miles.

The industry's steady progress was not interrupted until the 1970 recession. During the previous two decades, air traffic grew at an annual rate between 10% and 15%. In 1970, the industry's traffic growth failed to exceed the growth for the general economy for the first time in 33 years.[8] Air traffic now grows at a 4% annual rate, and in 1974, the industry experienced its first absolute traffic decline.[9] Air transportation is now a mature industry that must confront growing financial difficulties (see Section II-E).

B. Traffic Composition

Airlines today are primarily a vehicle for passenger transport. More than 70% of revenue ton-miles were generated by passenger traffic duing the last 25 years. Between 1960 and 1970, carriers attempted to improve freight service through the introduction of jet freighters. The annual growth rate of freight service averaged more than 20% between 1960 and 1965, hitting a peak growth rate of 40% in 1965, but expansion slowed down thereafter.[10] Even with the decreasing unit costs made possible by jet freighters, the cost of air freight service remains several times more expensive than competing modes. Airlines generate less than 1% of total intercity freight ton-miles, and freight represents a little more than 20% of total air revenue ton-miles (see Table AL-VI).

Airlines have become the primary means of travel from the United States to the rest of the world, and U.S.-flag carriers account for the bulk of this air traffic (see Table AL-VII). For most major trunk lines, however, international operations are of relatively minor importance. In 1974, international operations generated approximately 20% of total U.S.-carrier passenger-miles, representing a slight decline from prior year figures, with PAN AM and TWA accounting for two-thirds of the passenger-miles flown by U.S. carriers. Internationally-generated revenues as a percentage of total carrier revenues has fallen off between 1950 and 1974, standing at 18% of the total in 1974 (see Table AL-VIII).

C. Labor

As is the case in other transportation modes, labor occupies an important position in the airline industry. Employment costs, including fringe benefits, represented approximately 40% of 1974 operating revenues of trunk line carriers.[11] Between 1960 and 1974, the major carriers' employment increased from 146,739 to 263,369 and productivity expanded at an even faster rate (see Table AL-IX).

A majority of airline empioyees are represented by unions, and they exercise considerable bargaining strength. Since labor tends to be both highly skilled and ephemeral, producing a service that cannot be stockpiled, strikes have an immediate and large impact on carrier operations. Employees are generally organized along craft lines and are represented by several unions including: International Association of Machinists, Association of Flight Attendants, Air Line Pilots Association, Airline Employees Association, Transport Workers Union, Aircraft Mechanics Association, International Brotherhood of Teamsters, and the Professional Air Traffic Controllers Association. Air traffic controllers are federal employees and bargain with the Civil Service Commission.

To counteract the impact of strikes, scheduled airlines entered into a Mutual Aid Pact which provides financial assistance to carriers affected by work stoppages. Approved by the CAB in 1959, the Mutual Aid Pact has been opposed by all of the major unions as a circumvention of fair bargaining requirements. By 1964, most of the major trunk line carriers had joined the pact, and in subsequent years the CAB and Courts overruled objections to this arrangement. Payments to Mutual Aid Pact members can be substantial; in 1974, for instance, NATIONAL AIRLINES received approximately $42 million as compensation for a 100-day machinists' strike.[12]

D. Technological Change

The most important technological change affecting the industry has been the development of jet aircraft. The introduction of both the early narrow-bodied jets, followed later by the wide-bodied or jumbo jets, have provided the industry with a means to reduce unit costs and increase passenger capacity. The first turbo-jet was introduced into regular passenger service in 1958. These narrow-bodied jets, such as the Boeing 707's and DC-8's, permitted faster transcontinental and transoceanic service. Derivative models of these planes served as the industry's workhorses for nearly a decade. Operating costs were minimized through a number of improvements, including the turbo-fan engines which improved fuel efficiency and increased thrust.

The first Boeing 747 was introduced into regular serviee in 1970, followed in later years by the Douglas DC-10 and Lockheed L-1011. The wide-bodied jets quickly became the industry's new prize. These planes have the capacity to accomodate from 250 to 350 passengers, compared to passenger capacities of 130 for the 727,

* Revenue ton-miles is the number of tons carried one mile. This figure measures both freight and passenger traffic. Since 1970, the CAB assigned each passenger a standard weight value of 200 pounds.

145 for the 707, and 150 for the DC-8. More importantly, compared with the older generation of planes, the bigger jets were quieter and more fuel-efficient.

The most recent plane to enter commercial service is the supersonic transport carrier, the Concorde. Jointly developed by British and French manufacturers, the Concorde does not yet appear to have a secure future. Introduced at a time when fuel efficiency is becoming an important requirement for new planes and as tougher environmental standards are being established by government agencies, the 1,350 mph Concorde is less fuel-efficient and noisier than the wide-bodied jets. Consequently, its introduction into this country has been bitterly resisted.

The next line of jets will probably be more efficient and quieter, with less passenger capacity than the present fleet. Through the use of high by-pass engines, which both reduce jet noise and increase fuel efficiency, and the development of improved wing design, which provides more lift on takeoff, the newer planes can be 30% more efficient than previous models.[13] While the technology to develop such planes is available, there is some question whether the U.S. airline industry will be able to finance another round of plane acquisitions.

E. Financial Performance

In contrast to 1966, when the major carriers earned a record high profit of $427 million, airlines were hit hard by the 1970 recession, reporting a $200 million loss for that year. Since that time, the airline industry has been in a precarious financial position. Air transportation is now a mature industry with cyclical earnings and a return on total capital below historical levels (see Table AL-X). While a number of companies continue to be consistently profitable, several large carriers have been pushed perilously close to financial insolvency during the past few years.

A number of factors are responsible for the industry's present financial dilemma. The impact of escalating fuel prices was immediately felt by all carriers, causing burgeoning operating costs. In 1973, jet fuel prices nearly tripled, and, according to one estimate, each 1¢ fuel hike cost the industry $100 million.[14] In addition to the obvious impact of more expensive fuel, which in the long-run is offset through fare increases, the industry faces other, more serious problems.

Functioning within a regulatory climate that largely prevents price competition, airlines have developed the practice of increasing flight frequencies and offering better flight amenities such as movies and food. Because airline consumers desire convenient departure and arrival times as well as flexibility in travel routes, the carriers in a given market which provide the greatest number of flights will tend to draw the majority of the market's traffic. Thus each carrier strives to increase its flight frequencies to raise or maintain its market share.

Flowing from this pattern of competition, the industry greatly increased its overall capacity. Initially, continued growth in traffic was strong enough to absorb expanding capacity. The newer planes, furthermore, permitted carriers to fly profitably at lower passenger capacities. Airlines became highly-leveraged in terms of operational economics—each one point change in passenger load factor (percentage of total available seats actually occupied) represented a change in revenues exceeding $100 million. The 1970 turning point in traffic growth marked the end of successful competition through expanding capacity. Passenger load factors have dropped and planes currently fly a little more than half full (see Table AL-XI). Furthermore, the rather sharp swings in traffic and operating costs had dramatic impact on air carrier finances. Carrier net income is extremely sensitive to slight changes in operating variables such as costs, fares, and traffic volume (see Table AL-XII).

Rapid expansion required enormous capital expenditures in excess of internally-generated finances. In order to secure these funds, airlines have accumulated a large debt—interest expenses increased from $112.1 million in 1965 to more than $400 million by 1974. Debt presently represents more than 60% of capitalization for many larger carriers.[15]

Carriers have also come to rely heavily upon equipment leasing to secure needed funds, and many have a debt plus equity ratio greater than 70/30.[16] Leasing arrangements facilitated equipment acquisitions at a time when many carriers could not easily raise money through loans. Furthermore, leasing arrangements generally carry lower interest charges than those available through more conventional financing arrangements. Insurance companies have been a traditional source of equipment leases. In retaining nominal ownership of the aircraft equipment, the insurance company is allowed to immediately utilize the 7% investment tax credit. In addition to actual lease payments, the creditor receives the added benefit of using depreciation expenses on the equipment as a write-off against other income.

This form of financing may be temporarily unavailable to most carriers. Many companies are no longer able to receive insurance company financing because of deteriorating interest coverage.* While commercial banks have also entered leasing arrangements, it does not appear that airlines will be able to tap this potential source of funds at past levels.

Airlines have taken steps to reverse this situation. Schedules have been pared back and carriers are now promoting new discount fares to improve load factors. In the wake of a traffic upsurge during 1976, the airline industry demonstrated that it is still capable of generating strong earnings.[17] The industry, however, must now prepare for two additional changes. In order to comply with new federal noise standards, carriers must either replace older, narrow-bodied jets, or retrofit engines with noise deadening materials. Either course of action will require substantial expenditures. In addition, airlines may soon have to contend with the vagaries of a more competitive market (see Section III-B).

III. GOVERNMENT INVOLVEMENT

Through the administration of mail subsidies and expenditures for airport and air navigation facilities, the federal government has been the decisive factor in transforming the fledgling industry of the 1920's into a major transportation mode of the 1970's. The industry, as a recipient of federal aid, soon became subject to federal oversight and regulation to insure that safe transportation would be provided at a reasonable cost by an economically stable industry. Several parts of the federal government assume direct responsibility in overseeing the industry, including the Department of Transportation, the Civil Aeronautics Board, and the President of the United States.

* Under New York State's insurance law, which is generally accepted as the industry standard, insurance companies cannot lend money to corporations with dangerously low interest coverages.

If measured solely by the industry's operational progress, the 50-year period of federal involvement must be judged a success. By the end of 1973, 90% of the world world's general aviation fleet was U.S. manufactured, and the U.S. carried more air travelers than the rest of the world, excluding the U.S.S.R., combined. Aircraft operations at Chicago's O'Hare Airport are approximately equivalent to those of the London, Paris and Rome airports combined.[18]

Recently, however, a growing number of persons have been asking probing questions about the impact of federal regulation. Efforts to modify CAB controls, allowing greater price competition and relaxation of entry restrictions, is gathering greater support within the government. Some form of regulatory change now appears imminent and the impact on the industry will necessarily be great.

A. Department of Transportation

1. Safety Regulation

The Department of Transportation is involved in aircraft safety regulation through the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA). The FAA is principally responsible for promulgating and enforcing safety standards related to equipment, navigation, and pilot licensing. The National Transportation Safety Board, which is an independent government body, is empowered to investigate and determine the cause of aircraft accidents. These functions had been performed by a host of administrative predecessors (see Table AL-XIII). In terms of fatalities per passenger-miles, air transportation has established a safety record superior to that of private automobiles and buses but somewhat below that of passenger train service.[19]

As specified in the Noise Control Act of 1972, the FAA has consulted with the Environmental Protection Agency in formulating tougher aircraft noise standards. Under these new regulations, narrow-bodied jets such as the 707's and DC-8's must either be replaced by quieter planes or retrofited with noise-deadening materials. The federal government has not yet required compliance with these new regulations. However, British and French attempts to land the Concorde—which does not comply with these federal standards—at U.S. airports have strengthened the movement against excessive airport noise. Responding to community pressure, Boston and Los Angeles airports have announced steps to enforce their own noise control standards within the next several years. In turn, the Air Transport Association, which represents the major air carriers, has sought to block these moves through court action.[20] These local initiatives may prompt the federal government to act with greater speed in curbing airport noise.

2. Airway and Airport Development

The federal government has been the principal source of airway and airport development funds. Beginning with the Air Commerce Act of 1926, the government has undertaken a program of airway development which continues to this day. Airways are aerial highways representing clearly defined navigable routes which are subdivided at uniform altitude levels. Federal airway funds are devoted to developing modern navigational systems, such as radar and micro-wave communication, and are also used to employ air traffic controllers, who have been federal employees since 1936.

Early legislation which authorized federal airway funds did not provide for airport assistance. Nevertheless, during the Depression, the government assisted airport development through work relief programs. According to one estimate, 70% of civil airport expenditures were federally-derived between 1933 and 1940.[21] In 1940, Congress made its first airport appropriation, delegating $40 million to the Civil Aeronautics Administration for this purpose. With the passage of the Federal Airport Act of 1946, the federal government made a substantial commitment to aid airport development, providing funds on a matching basis with state governments.

Between 1946 and 1969, more than $2.3 billion was spent under this legislation, with half of this amount consisting of federal money. Seeking to more rapidly develop the national system of airways and airports to accomodate swelling air traffic, Congress passed the Airport and Airway Development Act of 1970. This legislation significantly increased federal expenditures and created an Airport and Airway Trust Fund. Funds are accumulated through a user-charge assessed on passenger tickets (8%), freight (5%), fuel (7¢ per gallon), and international departures ($3 charge). Between 1970 and 1975, federal airport and airway expenditures exceeded that spent during the previous 25 years.[22]

Although financed through user-charges, studies suggest that costs are not equitably shared. It is estimated that a fair distribution of costs based on use would be allocated as follows: 50% by air carriers, 30% by general aviation, and 20% by military transport. Based upon actual 1973 payments into the Trust Fund, however, air carriers contributed 95% of their share while general aviation users paid only 17% of theirs.[23]

B. Civil Aeronautics Board

From its inception, the CAB has had to both subsidize and regulate the airline industry. The consolidation of these administrative functions within one body reflects the two-fold purpose of federal regulation: the promotion of air transportation and prevention of anticompetitive practices. The CAB is presently facing new criticism that its regulation has not worked to insure a sufficiently competitive industry structure.

1. Subsidies

Passage of the Air Mail Act of 1925 ("Kelly Act") provided a struggling airline industry with an important revenues source by authorizing the Post Office to contract with private carriers for air mail service. Air mail contracts became the primary means of economic survival for an industry that was not otherwise commercially viable.

By 1930, the Postmaster General had been given broad authority to fix air mail payments and distribute air routes. By changing the basis for determining these payments, the Postmaster was granted, in effect, the power to subsidize air carrier operations. The system of awarding these contracts was soon changed, however, following the revelation that some payments were made in scandalous excess. After an unsuccessful attempt to have the Post Office again assume direct operation of air mail service, the government accepted competitive bids from private air carriers. The distribution of these contracts established both the corporate and route structure still basic to today's industry.

The Civil Aeronautics Authority was created in 1938 to regulate air carriers in a manner similar to the ICC's regulation of surface transportation. In 1940, the Authority was reorganized into the Civil Aeronautics Board, assuming among its functions the administration of mail subsidies. The Board both established the actual cost of providing mail services, which is paid by the Post Office, and determined whether a carrier was eligible for subsidy support, which is administered by the Board. The subsidy element of mail payments did not become clearly identified until 1953.

Between 1939 and 1974, air carriers received financial support amounting to approximately $1.9 billion. The bulk of this money was initially distributed to domestic and international trunk line carriers. By 1955, however, most subsidy payments went to support the operations of local service carriers, which have since received nearly 60% of the 1939-1974 total (see Table AL-XIV). Domestic trunk lines have generally operated subsidy-free since 1960, although one New England carrier, whose operations resembled those of a local carrier, received financial support from 1964 to 1968. International carriers have operated without subsidy support since 1958.

For the past 10 years, the CAB has distributed subsidies that averaged a little more than $60 million annually. These funds principally support unprofitable local service. Recently, however, several major air carriers, including TWA, PAN AM, and EASTERN, have requested either temporary or permanent subsidy support. The Board has thus far refused such requests which, if granted, would increase the magnitude of present payments.[24]

2. Economic Regulation

Airline regulation was instituted in 1938 under the Civil Aeronautics Act. Government regulation was advanced as a means to prevent predatory competition and help promote national air transportation. The CAB was empowered to regulate the industry as a public utility, with authority to control market entries and establish uniform prices. After nearly 40 years of CAB regulation, the contemporary airline industry has been shaped by government intervention.

CAB regulation is now under new scrutiny and it is probable that some form of deregulation will be enacted. Critics argue, in essence, that the airline industry is not a natural monopoly like the electric utility or telephone industries. Many firms can, and to a limited extent do, compete to serve the same market. In adopting a policy that sets uniform fares, they assert, the CAB encourages wasteful competition, as carriers fight for larger shares by increasing the number of flights and developing more attractive "frills." The consumer must pay higher fares to cover the costs of flying planes with many empty seats.

Pointing to the unregulated intrastate markets in Texas and California, where carriers operate at higher load factors and fares are 30 to 40% below those of CAB-carriers, these critics argue that deregulation of interstate transportation will force carriers to operate more efficiently, resulting in lower fares.

In response, many in the airline industry present a counter-argument that less federal regulation will lead to cut-throat competition, poorer service, and a financial shakeout resulting in the domination of the industry by a few large carriers. Furthermore, they assert, lower fares will not lead to marked increases in traffic, causing lower load factor yields that will offset increased operating capacities. Given the financial instability associated with a more competitive industry structure, carriers will find it increasingly difficult to raise adequate outside finances.

The movement to introduce more competition in the industry has been building for several years. Congress has on several occasions passed legislation instructing the CAB to admit new carriers into the air transportation market. In 1955, legislation was enacted which authorized permanent certification of local carriers. In 1962, the CAB was instructed to grant permanent operating certificates to charter airlines. More recently, the Board has removed some of its charter restrictions, again in response to congressional pressure.

The deregulation advocates are gathering increasing strength, bolstered both by a Senate Subcommittee investigation of CAB regulation and a General Accounting Office report estimating that consumers would have saved nearly $2 billion a year between 1969 and 1974 had federal controls been lifted.[25] The Chairman of the CAB has also come out in support of some form of regulatory flexibility, and UAL INC, breaking an otherwise solid industry front, announced its general agreement with attempts to introduce more competition.[26] With the Carter Administration also in favor of some deregulation, chances have improved considerably that some change will occur before the end of 1977. Hence, the airline industry may become the first successful target of those seeking to alter the traditional regulation of transportation.

C. Presidential Review

The CAB has the power to award international routes to U.S. carriers and grant domestic flying rights to foreign-flag airlines. These decisions, however, must be submitted to the President for final approval. Consequently, international aviation policy is not determined through normal regulatory procedures, but is submitted to the Chief Executive for evaluation of possible defense and foreign policy implications. In fact, since these decisions frequently determine which U.S. carrier will service a particular international route, presidential intervention has often meant the introduction of partisan politics.

Several presidents, including Truman, Eisenhower, Johnson, and Nixon, have been accused of overruling CAB recommendations due to political considerations. It was not known whether the Presidents' decisions were in agreement with those of the Board's, whose submitted recommendations were not made public. Groups ranging from the American Bar Association to the Aviation Consumer's Project have argued that this procedure was unsound. Consequently, President Ford issued a 1976 executive order which requires that CAB recommendations be publicly disclosed.[27]

TABLE AL-XIII. Chronology of Government Involvement in Air Transportation, 1916-1972

Date	Event	Comment
1916-1920	Congressional Appropriations	Post Office given money to experiment with air mail transportation including the purchase, operation, and maintenance of planes.
1925	Air Mail Act of 1925 ("Kelly Act")	Post Office authorized to contract with private carriers for air mail service.
1926	Air Commerce Act of 1926	Department of Commerce empowered to promulgate and enforce air safety standards. Department also assists airway development.
1930	Watres Act	Post Office given broad authority to fix mail contract rates and award routes. New basis for mail pay amounts, in effect, to subsidization of private carriers.
1934	Presidential Executive Order	In response to disclosure of air mail contract scandals, President orders Post Office to cancel all existing contracts and directs the War Department to assume air mail service.
1934	Air Mail Act of 1934	Air mail service contracts are distributed to private carriers through competitive bids. Aircraft manufacturers ordered to divest themselves of their airline interests. Interstate Commerce Commission empowered to regulate mail contract rates.
1936	Amendment to Railway Labor Act of 1926	Aircraft become subject to provisions of Act providing federal mediation.
1938	Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938	Civil Aeronautics Authority created as an independent regulatory agency empowered to regulate industry as public utility. Also assumes air safety responsibilities.

Date	Event	Comment
1940	Presidential Order	In an administrative reorganization, the Civil Aeronautics Authority becomes the Civil Aeronautics Board (CAB) and remains an independent regulatory agency. A Civil Aeronautics Administration created within the Department of Commerce with power to promote airway development and enforce safety standards.
1940	Congressional Appropriation	Congress appropriates $40 million for airport development to be administered by the Civil Aeronautics Administration.
1946	Federal Airport Act of 1946	Provides federal funds for airport development on a matching basis with state governments.
1953	Reorganization Plan No. 10	CAB is instructed to identify subsidy element contained in mail payments. The CAB pays the subsidy while the Post Office pays the service charge, which is determined by the Board.
1955	Congressional Bill	Local service carriers are granted permanent operating certificates.
1956	Amendment to Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938	Intra-Alaska and intra-Hawaii carriers are granted permanent operating certificates.
1958	Federal Aviation Act of 1958	Civil Aeronautics Authority becomes the Federal Aviation Administration.
1962	Public Law 87-528	Congress authorizes the permanent certification of charter airlines.
1966	Department of Transportation Act	CAB's accident investigation authority transferred to National Transportation Safety Board within the Department of Transportation.
1970	Airport and Airway Development Act of 1970	Provides for substantial increase in federal airport and airway support. Airport and Airway Trust Fund created, financed through user-charges.
1972	Noise Control Act of 1972	Federal Aviation Administration instructed to consult with Environmental Protection Agency in devising new airport noise standards.

Natural Gas Pipelines

I. INDUSTRY STRUCTURE

A. Classifications

The natural gas industry consists of three distinct segments: production, transmission, and local distribution. Exploration, drilling, gathering, and processing of natural gas is performed by producers which are primarily large integrated oil companies and smaller independent companies. The gas must be processed at the well to remove impurities and extract valuable by-products before it is ready to be transported long distances. Transmission companies (pipelines) then purchase the gas and provide intercity transportation. The gas is delivered and sold to distribution companies (local utilities) which, in turn, market the fuel to industrial, commercial, and residential customers.

Interstate natural gas pipelines, which are regulated by the Federal Power Commission (FPC), are the subject of this introduction. Companies that provide gas transportation entirely within one state (intrastate pipelines) are not federally regulated and are therefore excluded. Presently, a little more than 65% of marketed gas production—defined as production usefully consumed—is transported by federally-regulated companies.

In contrast to other modes of regulated transportation, gas pipelines own the commodities they transport. In addition, they are an integral segment of the natural gas industry. For these reasons, gas pipelines are often classified as public utilities and are excluded from most transportation studies. The transmission segment of the gas industry is included in this Directory so that readers can compare oil and gas pipelines.

B. Transport Geography

Natural gas production is geographically concentrated, with over 80% of 1973 production originating in Texas, Louisiana, and Oklahoma. Other significant producing wells are located in Kansas, New Mexico, and Wyoming. Pipelines extend from these fields to the major consuming regions. Areas east of the Mississippi River draw upon the Texas-Louisiana Gulf Coast reserves. The inland producing areas of North Texas, Oklahoma, and Kansas feed the utility systems in the Midwest, Great Plains, and Mountain states. The Pacific Coast principally depends upon the working fields in west Texas and New Mexico.

Most of this expansive pipeline system was constructed within the past 25 years. Between 1950 and 1974, transmission pipeline mileage increased from 113.1 to 263.5 thousand miles (see Table PG-I). When a Canadian pipeline was extended southward into Vermont in 1966, all 48 lower states received natural gas service. Canada, the largest source of pineline imports, connects into the U.S. system at several points to provide approximately 5% of domestic consumption. A number of states in the Midwest and Pacific Coast receive significant supplies of Canadian gas.

Major additions to the national system are planned. TENNECO INC has applied for FPC permission to construct a 498-mile pipeline to supply New England with gas imported from Algeria. The most important future pipeline construction, however, involves the enormous Alaskan Prudhoe Bay reserves. Three competing proposals (Alcan Gas Project, Arctic Gas Project, and El Paso Project) place construction costs in the $7-10 billion range. After some delay, an FPC staff study has recommended the Arctic Gas Project, involving 15 U.S. and Canadian companies. In its recommended form, the project would deliver gas from both the Prudhoe Bay and MacKenzie Delta for transmission to U.S. and Canadian users respectively. Construction will not begin until the U.S. Congress and President, as well as the Canadian Government, give final approval.

C. Concentration

At year's end 1974, there were 81 Class A or B companies, with revenues of at least $1 million, reporting to the FPC as interstate pipelines. Most interstate gas transportation, nevertheless, is handled by a dozen large companies. In 1974, the largest operator had 8% of the industry's operating revenues, while the largest 4, 8, and 12 companies had 26.70%, 45.57%, and 60.48% respectively of the total (see Natural Gas Pipeline Operator Chart).

The degree of market concentration is increased when corporate connections are considered. A number of the large operators share common corporate parents through a variety of relationships; public utility holding companies own several major pipelines; and several pipeline companies are subsidiaries or joint ventures of other pipelines. When market shares are calculated by combining the revenues of commonly-owned operators, the largest 4, 8, and 12 companies had 30.54%, 50.51%, and 67.80% respectively of total 1974 revenues (see Table PG-II).

SOURCE: Federal Power Commission, Statistics of Interstate Natural Gas Pipeline Companies, 1974; Form No. 2 filed with the FPC for year's end 1974.

FPC regulation of natural gas producers has been one of the primary features of federal control of gas transportation. Market concentration in the gas production segment of the industry, therefore, is relevant to the pipeline industry. For the most part, large, integrated oil companies provide the gas sold to interstate pipelines. Measured in volume of gas sales to pipeline companies, the largest 4, 8, and 12 producing companies had 24.48%, 42.01%, and 53.11% respectively of the total 1974 market (see Table PG-III).

D. Corporate Structure

Since they require large capital investments, natural gas pipelines are predominantly publicly-held or subsidiaries of public corporations. One of the more important aspects of the industry's corporate structure in recent years has been diversification, which is, in part, a response to the uncertainties surrounding future gas supplies for the interstate market (see Section II-B).

Vertical integration, the expansion into at least two of the three segments of the industry, is not an entirely new phenomenon. For a number of years, several pipeline companies have operated as subsidiaries of gas distributors or producers (e.g., Pacific Gas Transmission and Cities Service Gas Co). A number of pipelines own gas-producing properties or have established producing affiliates. The percentage of the total interstate domestic gas supply represented by pipeline production has declined during the past 10 years, accounting for approximately 6% of the total in 1971.[1] To secure an adequate gas supply, interstate companies are now aggressively expanding their gas-producing capacity.[2]

Diversification has also taken other directions, indirectly related to gas transportation. In a survey, the FPC found the most common areas of diversification to be gas and oil production, plastics, chemicals, fertilizers, and local gas distribution. A handful of companies, however, have branched out into unrelated areas. The most extreme example is TENNECO INC which derived 82% of its 1974 revenues from non-pipeline sources (see individual company profiles).

Pipeline diversification raises the question of vertical integration and its potential for price abuses. However, these difficulties are mitigated by the nature of federal regulation; the FPC controls prices from the producing field until the gas is sold to a local utility. If federal deregulation of gas production is enacted, integration of pipelines back into production will present a different problem.[3]

II. ECONOMIC DYNAMICS

A. Historical Background

The discovery of natural gas predates its early application in the United States by several centuries. In this country, the first natural gas well was discovered in Fredonia, N.Y. in 1821. It was, however, the commercial exploitation of oil in the followirg decades that led to the discovery of large gas reserves in the "Appalachian Fields."

Originally viewed as a relatively valueless by-product of oil drilling, the gas was largely disposed of through venting or burning off. Its commercial significance was soon appreciated and it was employed for illumination and heating. However, an efficient and inexpensive transportation technology had to be perfected before gas consumption could be extended beyond the immediate vicinity of the wells.

The construction of long-distance transmitting pipelines opened new markets for the fuel. The first "major" pipeline was constructed in Pennsylvania during 1872, transporting gas five miles into the town of Titusville. Truly long distance pipelines did not become a reality until the development of new construction techniques during the late 1920's (e.g., electrical welding). Thereafter, natural gas became a major fuel source capable of satisfying a growing part of the nation's energy demand.

Between 1930 and 1950, pipeline mileage more than doubled and natural gas consumption increased to 20% of the national energy demand. To meet the acute energy needs of the Northeast during World War II, the government initiated construction of two large-diameter oil pipelines known as "Big Inch" and "Little Big Inch." In 1946, these same lines were sold to a new corporation, TEXAS EASTERN TRANSMISSION, and converted into a natural gas transport system. These large-diameter, long-distance pipelines effectively linked the Northeast to the Texas and Louisiana reserves, at a fraction of the previous cost.

From 1950 to 1970, the increased construction of transmission pipelines brought gas into all major regions. By the end of this period, total gas pipeline mileage nearly tripled, amounting to more than 900,000 miles, and transmission trunk miles increased twofold (see Table PG-I). The expanded transport capacity spurred gas exploration and drilling with proved reserves growing from 184 trillion cubic feet (tcf) to 290 tcf (see Table PG-IV).

Natural gas currently supplies 35% of the country's energy requirements, making it second only to oil (see Table PG-V). More importantly, natural gas provides more than half of the energy consumed by non-transportation users.[4] However, natural gas production and total proved reserves have both fallen off in recent years. The "natural gas shortage" and its proposed resolution is now the major issue confronting the industry, government, and consumers (see Section II-B).

B. Market Trends

1. Physical Properties

Natural gas possesses important relative fuel advantages. It is extremely efficient, with nearly 70% of its wellhead heat content utilized in residential heating. In comparison, the utilization rate for both oil and coal is approximately 50% (see Table PG-VI). Furthermore, natural gas is exceptionally clean, since the extraction of valuable by-products in the field involves the removal of sulphur, water, and non-combustible gases.

2. Transportation Costs

Natural gas is less expensive to produce than oil but costs several times as much to transport. By nature it is a bulky fuel that must be compressed during transportation and storage. At atmospheric pressure, natural gas contains from .1% to .3% of the heat content of a solid or liquid fuel of equal volume. Even at a pressure of 600 pounds per square inch, the usual condition during pipeline transportation, one cubic foot of gas contains only 6% to 7% as much energy as one cubic foot of coal. Transportation costs account for 50% to 80% of the final gas price. During fiscal year 1974, on the average, interstate pipelines bought their gas at 24.41¢ per thousand cubic feet (mcf), and sold it to distributors for 54.46¢ per mcf, while consumers (residential, industrial, and commercial) paid 73.01¢ per mcf.[5]

Fixed expenses account for the greatest percentage of total pipeline costs. Approximately 90% of transmission costs are represented by depreciation, taxes, and return on plant investment. Maintenance and operating costs, which vary in part with the quantity of gas transported, make up the remaining expenses. Pipelines are most efficient when operating under conditions of full utilization (high load factor). The cost of transporting gas at a 50% load factor is nearly twice that, per mcf, when gas is transported by a pipeline operating at 100% of capacity.[6]

To achieve a high load factor, buying and selling of gas is made according to 15- to 25-year contracts between producer-pipeline and pipeline-distributor. Under these agreements, the producer is committed to supply the pipeline with a specified quantity of gas, while the pipeline is similarly obligated to provide distributors with a definite gas supply. Failure to accept or deliver contract-stipulated gas can result in penalty payments. Furthermore, the contracts contain escalator clauses providing for periodic price increases.*

3. Consumption Patterns

During the 25-year period beginning in 1950, the consumption of natural gas increased fourfold, while revenues generated from these sales multiplied nearly 15 times (see Table PG-VII). Abundant supplies of the fuel at relatively low prices provided the foundation for the expansion of the natural gas market. Consumption patterns revealed a shift by industrial, residential, and commercial users away from other, more expensive fuels to natural gas. In 1974, for example, the average annual retail price of natural gas was $1.42 per million British Thermal Units (mmbtu), compared to $8.29 per mmbtu for electricity and $2.59 per mmbtu for no. 2 fuel oil (see Table PG-VIII).

In terms of volume consumed, industrial users account for 51% of the 1974 total; 30% was used in residences and 14.3% in commercial establishments. Residential consumers, however, contributed 45% of total 1974 revenues, while industrial and commercial consumers provided 35% and 16% respectively (see Table PG-IX).

A controversial aspect of prevailing consumption is large volume gas sales to industrial users at lower prices. These industrial sales are justified by some on the basis of pipeline economics. Residential and commercial demand is largely seasonal, with gas sales to these consumers dropping off sharply during the warmer months. During the summer, industrial sales help pipelines maintain high load factors throughout the entire year. Without such sales, it is argued, pipelines would operate at lower capacities, resulting in higher transport costs per mcf of gas for residential and commercial users. The Federal Power Commission assigns a low priority to industrial consumption, insuring that other consumers have first access to available supplies during the peak demand season.

Industrial sales are nevertheless opposed by others on the grounds that it is a wasteful use of a precious natural resource. Industrial consumption often occurs under conditions when the relative efficiencies of natural gas are slight or insignificant. In particular, its use as boiler fuel to generate electricity could easily be taken over by a more abundant fuel such as coal. According to this view, more effort should be placed on increasing gas storage capacity in consuming regions, so that during the summer months gas can be transported and stored for eventual use during the winter.

Consumption patterns differ among various regions. In general, producing areas consume more gas, with a greater percentage devoted to industrial applications. The West South Central states, which include Texas and Louisiana, had a per capita consumption of 300.5 mcf in 1973 compared to the national average of 94.5 mcf and New England's consumption of 20.8 mcf. Furthermore, consumption in producing regions is predominantly industrial, representing 80% of total usage. Half of the consumption in the Northeast and Midwest, by contrast, was comprised of residential and commercial use (see Table PG-X).

4. Gas Supply

Perhaps the most important market trend in recent years has been the shrinking gas supply available for interstate transportation. Proved reserves (which represent an estimate of technically and economically recoverable discovered gas) committed to interstate pipelines declined from 198.1 tcf to 134.2 tcf between 1967 and 1973 (see Table PG-XI). The interstate gas shortage can be largely explained by the higher price paid for gas sold on the unregulated, intrastate markets of Texas and Louisiana.

Since 1954, the Federal Power Commission regulated the field price of gas sold to interstate pipelines. This had the effect of keeping prices down and encouraged the developing gas market. Given the abundant gas supply, prices on the unregulated market were at the same level as those on the FPC-regulated market. With the onset of the "energy crisis" during the 1970's, however, unregulated gas prices soared along with those of other fuels. Prior to recent FPC gas hikes, interstate gas sold for 40¢ mcf, compared to $1.80-$2.00 mcf for unregulated gas. Consequently, an increasing portion of new gas discoveries is being diverted to the intrastate market (see Table PG-XII).

Whether the interstate gas shortfalls are part of a national gas shortage is a hotly contested issue. Some critics, including some congressional representatives, contend that producers are "withholding" or "hiding" reserves until prices are decontrolled. On the other hand, those warning of an impending long-term shortage can point to declining national proved reserves. In 1967, estimated proved reserves peaked at 292.9 tcf, declining each year thereafter except for 1970, when Alaska's Prudhoe Bay reserves were added to the national total. According to estimates made by the American Gas Association, there were 237 tcf of proved reserves in 1974, compared to 262 tcf in 1960 (see Table PG-IV).

* Contract terms require FPC approval. The Commission has the power to alter contract-stipulated gas prices or quantities.

Proved reserves, however, represent only a part of the total potential gas supply. The interpenetration of economic and technical factors will largely determine whether it will be necessary to sharply curtail gas consumption during the next thirty years. For example, a total of more than 500 tcf of gas is known to exist in the relatively impermeable Rocky Mountain reservoir or in coal beds as methane gas. These potential resources are not thought to be recoverable under present technical and economic conditions. Furthermore, the outer continental shelf and other largely undeveloped regions are believed to contain sizeable gas reserves. Estimates of the total ultimate potential supply (proved reserves plus estimated undiscovered recoverable reserves) range from 1,000 tcf to 2,250 tcf.[7]

The natural gas debate ultimately centers around how to discover and exploit these potential gas resources most equitably and efficiently. Federal regulation of gas producers is currently at the forefront of this debate (see Section III-A).

C. Technological Change

The technology of pipeline transport differs significantly from that of other transport modes in that it typically requires less labor. Between 1964 and 1970, regulated gas pipeline employment averaged 38,400 persons, which is only a fraction of railroad, truck, or airline employment.[8] A number of innovations have improved pipeline efficiency, including the use of larger-diameter pipe, more powerful compressors, and higher tensile steel. But it is the development of alternative gas transportation technology that may prove to be the most important factor in the near future.

Production of liquified natural gas (LNG), where the gas is cooled into a liquid state reducing its volume by 99.8%, permits the importation of significant overseas gas supplies. Natural gas is shipped via tanker from the Middle East, with Algeria accounting for 80% of the U.S. LNG imports. These supplies, however, are nearly five times more expensive than domestically produced gas. While LNG imports may prove to be increasingly important, they now represent only about 5% of total consumption.

Synthetic natural gas (SNG) potentially represents an alternate source of supply. SNG can be produced from coal, oil shale, or organic refuse. Coal gasification, however, is the most feasible method using current technology. Anticipating future demand for coal-derived SNG, a number of pipelines, utilities, and coal companies have already leased large tracts of Western coal lands and have launched several test plants with government assistance. While estimates of the future importance of this gas source range from 1.2 tcf to 4.1 tcf, representing from 8.5% to 10.4% of projected total supplies in 1990, SNG production is not yet a commercially viable operation.

D. Financial Performance

Natural gas pipelines require a large investment in plant (pipeline, compressor, storage, etc.) relative to the revenues they generate. More than $2 of assets are required to produce $1 of revenues. During the 20-year period (1950-1970), pipeline companies annually invested, on the average, $1 billion in plant additions.[9]

Historically, external funds have been called upon to support these expenditures, traditionally with debt as the primary source of capital. Two-thirds of the funds required by pipelines were raised externally between 1950 and 1970. Of the $16 billion so raised, $12 billion, or 75%, was in the form of debt.[10] Consequently, pipeline companies are highly leveraged; that is, a large percentage of capitalization is composed of debt. Although the debt/capitalization ratio has declined from 59.9% to 50.9% between 1965 and 1974, borrowed money continues to be an important source of new funds, representing 78% of externally-generated capital in 1974.[11]

For more than two decades, this method of financing has been successful. The gas pipeline industry has enjoyed a period of substantial growth, consistent dividend payments, and strong earnings. During the most recent 10-year period (1965-1974), return on net investment increased from 6.6% to 10.0%.[12] More significantly, natural gas pipelines have consistently had higher earnings than other utilities.[13]

Uncertainty surrounding the future interstate gas supply has had financial consequences. Interest rates on pipeline debt have increased. Escalator clauses in debt agreements link payments to the estimated life of gas reserves. As these reserves decline, debt life is shortened and yearly payments must be increased. Furthermore, stock prices are particularly sensitive to the gas supply situation, and shares have generally traded at low price/earnings ratios in recent years. This makes it difficult for companies to issue more stock, which is often required to build an equity base for further debt-financing. The outcome of the debate concerning producer deregulation and pipeline companies' ability to secure sufficient gas supplies will largely determine future earnings.

III. GOVERNMENT INVOLVEMENT

In 1938, Congress directed the Federal Power Commission to regulate interstate gas transportation by enacting the Natural Gas Act. Waste of a precious natural resource and the problem of monopoly motivated federal intervention. Initially, only one segment of the industry was brought under federal control—the interstate transportation of gas for resale to local utility companies. In subsequent years, however, the FPC assumed control over other aspects of the industry, including production and direct pipeline sales to industrial users (see Table PG-XIII). For companies subject to its authority, the FPC regulates the price of gas bought and sold, controls construction and abandonment of facilities, grants power of eminent domain for acquisition of pipeline right-of-way, and requires that companies submit detailed financial and operating information.

A. Producer Regulation

The most controversial aspect of FPC regulation has been its control of the well-head price of gas sold to interstate companies. The Natural Gas Act of 1938 did not specifically provide for producer regulation. After World War II, a number of midwestern states and cities requested that the FPC overrule a proposed price increase made by a gas producer. The Commission refused on the grounds that it did not have the authority, but the petitioners took their case to the courts. Anticipating a Supreme Court ruling, Congress passed legislation specifically exempting producers from federal regulation. In 1950, President Truman vetoed the Kerr Bill, citing insufficient producer competition which would probably result in exorbitant consumer gas prices. Four years later, the Supreme Court ruled (Phillips case) that the FPC had the power to regulate producers' sales to interstate pipelines.

Two years after the Supreme Court decision, Congress again passed legislation deregulating producers. When presented with the Harris Bill in 1956, President Eisenhower exercised his veto because of the high pressure lobbying of deregulators. Thereafter, federal control over interstate prices--from the producing field until the gas is sold to a local utility--has been a primary factor in the industry's expansion. Gas prices were kept below those of competing fuels, leading to changeovers from oil and coal by industrial, commercial, and residential users.

As pipeline companies are now increasingly unable to meet their gas delivery commitments, the push for producer deregulation becomes stronger. Pipelines are obligated to provide specified quantities of gas to various users under long-term contracts. When pipelines cannot meet these commitments because of insufficient supplies, the FPC approves delivery curtailments. Residential users are given highest priority, with industrial customers receiving the first cutbacks. In recent years, curtailments have grown, and a number of companies have cut back scheduled deliveries by nearly 50%.[14]

Proponents of producer deregulation argue that higher gas prices are necessary as a first step in alleviating the gas shortage. With the resulting price equalization between the intra- and interstate markets, gas will no longer be diverted from interstate companies. Higher gas prices, it is argued, will act as an efficient arbiter of gas use, promoting fuel conservation and the conversion to other energy sources by industrial users. It is further contended that price increases will spur aggressive exploration and promote the development of alternate gas-producing technology. With the support of oil and gas producers, pipeline companies, the Federal Power Commission, and the financial community, the deregulation effort is gathering momentum.

Advocates of continued producer regulation--including public service commissions, consumer groups, and congressional representatives from consuming regions--argue that the pent-up demand for gas will produce a price explosion if federal controls are lifted. Producers will earn windfall profits, they contend, while higher gas prices will not result in appreciable supply increases. It is suggested that federal controls be extended into the intrastate market, thereby discouraging "low-value" consumption of dwindling gas resources by industrial users.

For the first time in nearly 20 years, a deregulation proposal reached the House floor in February of 1976. The proposal was defeated in a close vote and another bill was substituted which proposed deregulation of smaller producers while extending federal control over intrastate sales. Legislative action was stalled, however, and at the end of 1976 the present regulatory mechanism remained intact. The deregulation debate will resume in 1977, but the Federal Power Commission has already taken steps to increase natural gas well-head prices.

B. Price Increases

The Federal Power Commission has taken measures to alleviate the effects of the natural gas shortage.* Commission action to overhaul its regulation of producers and raise gas prices has attracted the most public attention. Beginning in 1974, when it abandoned area rate-making--by which gas prices were pegged to regional production costs--the FPC has moved to streamline its regulatory procedure and allow producers to charge higher prices to interstate pipelines.

In its first announcement of a uniform nationwide rate for new gas (flowing through wells after Jan. 1, 1973), the FPC indicated that gas would be sold at 40¢ per mcf. Previously, gas was selling for a little more than 20¢ per mcf. In subsequent decisions, the nationwide gas price was revised upward to 52¢ per mcf. In late 1976, however, the Commission announced a near tripling of prices. For gas sold under contracts beginning on January 1, 1975, the new price is $1.42 per mcf; for that committed during 1973 and 1974, $1.01 per mcf; and old gas now sells for as much as 29.5¢ per mcf. According to FPC estimates, the average price of all gas sold in 1977 will be 53¢ per mcf as compared to 40¢ per mcf in 1976, representing a $1.5 billion increase.

Various consumer groups have challenged these new increases, which contain provisions for refunds if the courts find recent FPC action contrary to the established precedents of producer regulation. Without deregulation of producers, regulatory attempts to administratively equalize prices for intra- and interstate gas are vulnerable to court reversals.

* For example, the FPC permits pipelines to purchase unregulated gas at free market prices on a 60-day emergency basis.

TABLE PG-XIII. Chronology of Government Involvement in Natural Gas Transportation, 1906-1976

Period	Event	Comment
1906	Hepburn Amendment to Interstate Commerce Act	Establishes precedent of federal pipeline regulation. ICC regulates oil and liquid pipelines (excluding gas).
1910-1930		State governments enact measures to conserve natural gas resources. Courts rule that transportation of gas across state lines can only be controlled by federal government.
1920	Federal Water Power Act	Federal Power Commission (FPC) established.
1930		Federal Power Commission reorganized into an independent regulatory agency.
1935	Federal Trade Commission Report	Federal Trade Commission reports to Congress that gas is wasted; holding companies acted as monopolies and recommended federal pipeline regulation.
1938	Natural Gas Act	FPC authorized to regulate the interstate transportation of gas by transmission companies for sale to local utilities.
1940-1950		FPC broadens regulatory power. Establishes control over sales to industrial users. During the post World War II energy crisis orders gas curtailments. Northern states and cities ask FPC to regulate wellhead gas prices.
1950	Kerr Bill	Anticipating a court decision concerning FPC authority to regulate gas producers, Congress passes legislation exempting producers from regulation. Truman vetoes bill citing insufficient competition among gas producers.
1954	Phillips Decision	Supreme Court rules that FPC has authority to regulate producer sales to interstate pipelines.
1956	Harris Bill	Congress again passes a bill exempting producers from FPC regulation. Eisenhower vetoes measure because of lobbying scandals.
1976	FPC Staff Decision	FPC staff approves Arctic Gas Project proposal to construct Alaskan gas pipeline bringing gas into Canada and continental United States.

Oil Pipelines

I. INDUSTRY STRUCTURE

A. Classifications

Pipelines occupy an important place in the petroleum industry, acting as the transportation link between production, refining, and marketing. In this introduction we examine the operations of oil pipelines that are regulated by the Interstate Commerce Commission (ICC). Commission-regulated companies accounted for 84.5% of the intercity ton-miles generated by all pipelines in 1974.*

Pipelines either transport crude oil from producing fields to refineries ("crude lines"), or carry petroleum products (such as gasoline, heating oil, and jet fuel) from refineries into regional markets ("product lines"). In 1974, the U.S. oil trunk line mileage was divided almost evenly between crude and product lines.[1]

B. Transport Geography

The geographic configuration of pipelines reflects the distribution of domestic oil resources and the location of docking points for imported petroleum. Crude lines generally carry oil from producing fields to nearby refineries; consequently, these lines are typically located in major producing states. More than 60% of ICC-regulated crude trunk lines are located in Texas, Oklahoma, Wyoming, and Kansas. A few lines carry crude oil to refineries in the industrial heartland, but none extend into the Northeast. Crude oil used by the northern upper-tier states comes from two or three lines that originate in Canada.

Product lines tend to be more dispersed, with Texas, Kansas, Oklahoma, and Missouri accounting for 37% of ICC-regulated product line mileage. A maze of product lines emanates from the large Eastern import depots, where Caribbean refineries dock gasoline and fuel oil, or from the Gulf Coast of Texas and Louisiana.

California has always been isolated from the rest of the U.S. pipeline network, with few of its lines bound for out-of-state destinations. A line drawn due south from Missoula, Montana to the Mexican border would cross only five pipelines linking California's prolific fields to the rest of the country—four product lines and one crude line. Oregon and Washington do not receive California oil, and rely instead upon Canadian imports.

The national pipeline network will receive a major new addition when the 800 mile Alaskan pipeline begins operations, now scheduled for summer of 1977. Representing an investment approaching $10 billion—which is larger than the combined pipeline investment of all other ICC-regulated companies—the Alaskan pipeline will bring large quantities of North Slope crude across the Arctic tundra to Valdez, Alaska. From there the oil will be shipped via tanker to the West Coast. Standard Oil of Ohio, a major producer of Alaskan oil, proposes to then bring its crude via pipeline from southern California. If approved, this line would represent the first major Western oil link to the rest of the country.[2]

C. Concentration

At the end of 1974, there were 104 pipeline operators producing revenues of $1.59 billion. The largest 21 operators generated 73.87% of this total, with the top 4, 8, and 12 operators accounting for 25.91%, 42.05% and 54.29% respectively (see Oil Pipeline Operator Chart). When market shares are calculated by combining the revenues of commonly-owned operators, this concentration figure does not change appreciably (see Table PO-I). This reflects the fact that several large pipelines are joint ventures of major integrated oil companies (see Section I-D).

A handful of pipeline companies account for the bulk of petroleum transport movements. In 1974, eight pipeline companies transported 62.25% of the total barrel-miles (number of barrels transported one mile) of crude oil carried in trunk lines. Petroleum product transportation is more concentrated; one company, COLONIAL PIPELINE CO, carried 45.27% of product barrel-miles, while the largest eight operators accounted for 75.45% (see Table PO-II).

D. Corporate Structure

The most striking feature of the pipeline industry's corporate structure is the exercise of governing influence or control by the largest integrated petroleum companies.* Through a variety of relationships, large integrated petroleum companies control 15 of the 21 largest oil pipelines on the CDE Operator Chart. Only one company is publicly-held (MAPCO INC), two are subsidiaries of railroads (Buckeye, and Southern Pacific pipelines), another two are controlled by other independents (Williams Pipe Line, and Texas Eastern Transmission Products Pipeline System), and one company is a subsidiary

*Under the proposed new Department of Energy Reorganization Act, jurisdiction over pipelines would be transferred out of the ICC to the new department.

* By integrated petroleum company we mean an oil company with operations in at least two of the three segments—production, refining, or marketing.

of a publicly-held pipeline company (Lakehead Pipeline).*

Pipelines controlled by oil companies (hereafter referred to as "integrated pipelines") are principally organized as subsidiaries or, in a number of important cases, as joint ventures. COLONIAL PIPELINE CO, which transports 45% of total product barrel-miles, and the Trans Alaska Pipeline System (TAPS), which represents the most expensive pipeline ever constructed, are both joint ventures.

Joint venture pipelines are normally organized as corporate stock companies or as "undivided interest lines." In the corporate stock company, the jointly-owned pipeline is a common carrier and therefore sets tariffs and determines total shipping capacity. COLONIAL PIPELINE is a corporate stock joint venture. The undivided interest line, on the other hand, is not itself a common carrier; the owners act as their own common carriers for goods transported through the system, completely controlling their own portion of the line with respect to tariffs, shipping capacity, etc. TAPS is an undivided interest line, with each of its eight owners acting as common carriers. Alyeska Pipeline Service Co, a non-profit company created by TAPS participants, is employed to construct, operate, and maintain the pipeline system.

Oil company ownership of pipelines has traditionally been the source of government investigations into anti-competitive oil company practices. ICC pipeline regulation was first instituted in 1906 as a response to Standard Oil Trust's ownership of several pipelines. Now, with the rising cost of energy, new attention has been brought to bear upon the operations of integrated petroleum companies, and their ownership of petroleum pipelines has become one of the primary areas of contention (see Section III).

II. ECONOMIC DYNAMICS

A. Historical Background

Oil was first discovered along Oil Creek in northeastern Pennsylvania in 1859 and was transported on barges to the Alleghany River. When oil drilling moved inland, teamsters were hired to haul the oil on wagons to the nearest water connection. Waterways were the primary connection to railroads until spurs were constructed linking producing areas to main rail lines. The teamsters carried crude oil to the rail spurs for $3 to $5 a barrel.

The earliest pipelines were developed as gathering lines to undercut the teamster rates which amounted to about 75% of the oil selling price. The first successful line connected a producing field to the railroad near Oil Creek, a distance of six miles, and carried 80 barrels an hour for $1 per barrel—significantly less than the cost of teamster haulage.

This early line was built by an entrepreneur who saw the opportunity to profit from transporting, rather than producing, oil. Other short gathering lines between fields and railways were built by independents or by producers who could not market their oil unless they bought a pipeline. Producers also financed lines constructed and operated by independents. Other lines were bought by refiners or other users requiring a secure supply of raw material. Finally, the railroads bought or built pipelines to insure reliable crude traffic for their rail lines.[3]

Oil transportation became an important tool in the struggle to achieve cartelization. John Rockefeller demanded rebates from railroads in exchange for shipping crude over their lines to his Ohio refineries. Because of the large volume of crude processed by Rockefeller refineries, which controlled 90% of domestic refining capacity, the railroads granted Standard both rebates on their shipments, and a kickback on the crude oil shipments of other companies. In response, Standard's competitors constructed the first oil trunk line; a larger, long-distance line. These new lines proved to be a more economical method of oil transportation, forcing railroads to lower their rates and prompting Standard to construct or buy several pipelines in order to maintain its superior position. Within 20 years of the first oil discoveries, pipelines emerged as the dominant means of transporting crude over long distances, despite the fact that railroads and barges continued to be crude carriers in areas where pipelines were not available.

Oil pipeline transportation underwent major changes during the first three decades of this century. In 1906, oil lines were designated common carriers, to be regulated by the ICC, making the rebating practices of Standard Oil Trust illegal. In subsequent years, the producing fields in Texas, Kansas, Oklahoma, and California rapidly replaced the Appalachian Fields as primary domestic oil sources, thereby requiring new pipeline construction. In 1930, the owners of Tuscarora Pipeline, a remnant of the dissolved Standard Oil Trust, ran refined products for the first time through a crude oil pipeline, and other companies quickly followed this example.

By 1940, pipelines had become the primary means of transport for combined crude and product movements, accounting for 39.79% of the total. In that year, pipelines transported more than 70% of the crude tons, but only 6.60% of the product tonnage.[4] During World War II, loss of tankers and their diversion for war transport provided added impetus for pipeline construction. The government contracted with major oil companies on a cost-plus fixed-fee basis to build the "Big Inch" and the "Little Big Inch" from Texas to the East Coast. These were the largest diameter pipelines of their time, significantly increasing pipeline product transport capacity. Pipeline deliveries of oil from the Southwest (Texas, Louisiana, Oklahoma, California, and Kansas) rose to 15 times the pre-war figures.

B. Market Trends

Since World War II, the volume of petroleum crude and product traffic has increased.* From 1950 to 1974, petroleum consumption more than doubled, and oil's share of domestic energy consumption rose from 37.2% to 42.48%.[5] Accompanying the expansion of the petroleum market, the amount of crude and product carried by all transport modes between 1950 and 1968 increased from 285.7 million to 1,563 million tons.[6]

* Three oil companies, through their subsidiaries, control 40% of INTERPROVINCIAL PIPE LINE LTD, which, in turn, wholly-owns Lakehead Pipe Line Co Inc.

Pipelines are capturing a growing share of this expanding traffic volume. Their share of total transported crude and product tonnage was 47.5% in 1973, compared with 38.9% in 1950 (see Table PO-III). Pipelines are an economical means of transporting large amounts of oil over long distances. When operating at close to full capacity, the per-mile cost of pipeline transportation compares favorably with that of competing modes.

Pipelines, which compete primarily with water carriers, dominate the transportation of crude petroleum, accounting for nearly 75% of the tonnage carried.* Competition for product traffic, however, is more intense. With the construction of large-diameter product lines, pipelines have recently managed to surpass water carriers in terms of product tonnage carried (see Table PO-IV). In particular, the construction of COLONIAL PIPELINE during the early 1960's diverted tanker-transported traffic from the Gulf to Atlantic Coast route.[7] Generally, the construction of large-diameter product lines have effectively reduced water carriers' share of product traffic. An oversupply of tanker capacity in recent years, however, may cause tanker rates to drop. In early 1976, for example, producers found it cheaper to ship oil in tankers from the Persian Gulf around Africa rather than send it directly to the Mediterranean through the Arabian American Oil Co's pipeline.[8]

By certain measures, the oil pipeline industry's expansion has been more vigorous than that of other transport modes. Between 1950 and 1974, pipeline's share of total intercity ton-miles grew from 11.81% to 22.77% (see Table PO-V). Presently, only railroads generate more ton-miles of freight than pipelines. Trunk line mileage grew from 96,418 to 153,089 during the same period, with product lines accounting for most of this expansion (see Table PO-VI). Revenue growth, however, has not been as strong. While pipeline revenues doubled during the 20-year period 1955-1974, pipeline's percentage of total ICC-regulated freight revenues dipped from 4.5% to 3.9% (see Table PO-VII). Industry revenues also grew at a slower rate than national income during the same period.[9]

This rather sluggish revenue expansion can be partially explained as a function of pipeline economics. As pipeline diameters have become larger, the transportation cost per ton-mile falls. Consequently, pipelines can charge the same or lower rates and still earn adequate returns on investment. In fact, the average revenue per ton-mile in 1974, representing an increase over the most recent ten-year average, is equal to the revenue per ton-mile figure recorded in 1950.[10] The industry, nevertheless, has typically earned a return on investment higher than those of other ICC-regulated modes (see Section II-D).

* For the most part, railroads and trucks complement, rather than compete with, pipeline transport.

C. Labor

Pipeline transport does not require a large number of employees relative to the ton-miles generated. Pipeline employment is less than 5% of that in the railroad or trucking industries. Between 1968 and 1972, output per man-hour, as measured by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, grew at a faster rate in the pipeline industry than in intercity trucking, railroads, and air transportation.[11] During period 1969-1974, oil pipeline employment averaged 15,000 persons.[12]

D. Financial Performance

Oil pipelines have typically earned an average return on investment of nearly 10% between 1969 and 1974.* By this measure, pipelines have been more profitable than ICC-regulated railroads and water carriers, but less profitable than motor carriers during the same period.[13] In terms of return on equity, however, pipelines fared considerably better in comparison with other ICC-regulated carriers and all manufacturing companies. During the five-year period beginning in 1969, pipelines earned, on the average, more than 16% on equity.

The higher return on equity results from the fact that the industry is highly-leveraged—that is, a large percentage of its capitalization is comprised of debt. In 1974, more than 60% of the industry's capitalization was represented by debt. The joint-venture product pipelines, however, had a debt/capitalization ratio exceeding 80%, and generally earned more than 25% on their equity. Financial agreements between oil companies and their pipeline subsidiaries/affiliates support these large debt/capitalization ratios. In contrast, the independently-owned pipelines have ratios that are below the industry average (see Table PO-IX).

Throughput agreements, where the oil company is obligated to ship a specified quantity of oil through a pipeline, provide debt security for integrated pipelines. The throughput is calculated to provide the pipeline with transportation revenues large enough to meet its expenses and debt payments as well as earn a return on investment. If the pipeline cannot meet its debt payments from current revenues, the oil company can be called upon to make a "deficiency payment" which is treated by the pipeline as an advance payment against future oil shipments.†

With the security represented by a large integrated oil company behind it, pipelines are able to raise large sums through debt-financing. Despite high debt/capitalization ratios, pipeline-borrowing typically enjoys favorable credit ratings bearing lower interest rates. As a matter of practice, major financial rating services treat the pipeline security as if it was issued by the oil company itself. This financing method is largely a response to government limits on integrated pipeline earnings (see Section III).

* The ICC return on investment figure is net operating income (less federal taxes on ordinary income) divided by net investment in transportation property (plus working capital).

 Return on equity is net income divided by stockholders' equity (retained income, capital surplus, and capital stock).

† The throughput agreement is generally described as a contingent liability in a footnote to the oil company's balance sheet.

III. GOVERNMENT INVOLVEMENT

When the power of the oil trusts began to impinge on small producers in new inland fields at the beginning of the 20th century, these companies supported consumer demands that the government reorganize the petroleum market. One result of investigations undertaken at the time was a finding that control of pipelines by integrated companies promoted monopoly.* Two courses of action were seriously considered: imposing pipeline regulation similar to that already applied to railroads, or forcing integrated companies to divest their pipeline interests. While actual government involvement has been limited to regulation, repeated attempts have been made to divorce pipelines from the control of large oil companies. (For chronology of government involvement, see Table PO-X.)

A. Interstate Commerce Commission

Before a final decision was reached on the government's case against the Standard Oil Trust, Congress passed the Hepburn Act in 1906 bringing pipelines under ICC regulation. Liquid pipelines, except for gas, were declared subject to common carrier law. This measure was originally seen as a first step by many of its proponents, and ICC regulation did not become truly operational until after the court-ordered divestiture of the Standard Oil Trust in 1911. In accepting oil company control of pipelines, the government relied upon regulation to prevent monopoly abuses in pipeline transportation.

In several important respects, however, ICC pipeline regulation differs significantly from that applied to other other transport modes. Pipelines are not required to operate under "certificates of public convenience and necessity" so that construction or abandonment of lines is not a matter for Commission action. The ICC does not have the power to review certain financial and corporate transactions such as debt issues, mergers, consolidations, and joint ventures. Finally, pipelines are not subject to the "commodity clause" contained within the Hepburn Act, which prohibits certain carriers from transporting the goods they produce. (This means that the producers and refiners of petroleum are permitted to own or control pipelines.) The Commission does have the power to review rates and tariffs, require companies to file reports for statistical and valuation purposes, and generally enforce pipelines' common carrier obligation to satisfy reasonable requests for its transportation services.

During the formative period of ICC regulation between 1920 and 1940, the Commission attempted to bring forward several informal complaints against integrated pipeline companies. Usually, a formal complaint is necessary to elicit Commission support. In spite of charges that integrated pipelines make it difficult for independent shippers to use their facilities (for example, pipeline owners established a 100,000 barrel minimum shipping requirement, which the ICC reduced to 10,000 barrels in 1922), few formal complaints have actually been filed with the ICC. Critics claim that this is due to conditions within the petroleum market where the independent's survival depends upon the "good will" of the major integrated companies. Others explain the absence of complaints as no more than a reflection of the fact that independents are given a reasonable opportunity to use pipelines.

The profits earned by integrated pipelines have been a particularly sensitive issue and the cause of much Commission deliberation and Justice Department investigation. All shippers must pay the common rate for transportation services. Owner-shippers, however, recoup part of their cost through dividends paid to them as shareholders. In 1934, the Commission began an investigation into pipeline companies' payments to shareholders. Finding that a number of pipeline companies earned a return on investment from 25% to 30%, in a 1940 decision the Commission limited profits on crude lines to 8% and profits on product lines to 10%. In limiting profits, the ICC attempted to reduce this rate-cost differential to a minimum level that encouraged continued pipeline investment but did not place the independent shipper at a severe competitive disadvantage. The Commission's method of determining the maximum return is subject to much criticism, including a Justice Department attempt to revise the present procedure (see Section III-B).

In addition to the anticompetitive effects of excessive pipeline profits, the ICC attempts to enforce common carrier behavior by monitoring access to pipelines by non-owner shippers. Shipper discrimination can adversely affect competition in the petroleum markets. If a pipeline is the most efficient means of transport to a specific market, and independents serving that market cannot use that pipeline, the shipper-owners may earn higher downstream profits. In this case, the transportation advantage of the pipeline would become the source of extra-profit for the shipper-owners when the prevailing market price of oil is determined by petroleum transported by other, more expensive means.

To prevent shipper discrimination, the ICC may order a pipeline to grant a reasonable request to use its facilities. If the pipeline is operating at 100% capacity, the operator will have to make room in the system for the new shipper. In this way, an owner-shipper can be required to curtail shipments to accomodate an independent user.

It is disputed whether these measures are sufficient to prevent shipper discrimination. Critics contend that, because integrated pipelines provide neither storage nor hook-up facilities, the independent shipper's pipeline access is restricted. In contrast, they add, of the 20 largest pipelines, only the three non-integrated companies—William, Buckeye, and Southern Pacific pipelines—provide input and output tanks for independents shipping oil over their lines. On the other hand, oil companies point out that non-owner shippers do, in fact, use integrated pipelines and that many integrated pipelines do not provide such facilities for their owners.

The Commission does not regulate oil pipelines as public utilities. In contrast to FPC regulation of natural gas pipelines, the ICC has limited power to review oil pipeline operations. Commission pipeline regulation is also limited in comparison to its regulation of other modes such as railroads, motor carriers, and freight forwarders. Under these conditions, the industry has managed to finance expansion and undertake construction projects of enormous size, such as the Trans Alaska Pipeline System. Given the limited jurisdiction of the ICC, however, the Justice Department has taken a more active interest in pipelines than in other ICC-regulated modes.

B. Department of Justice

Pipeline regulation, and the break-up of the Standard Oil Trust in 1911, resulted in a new organization of the petroleum market. In subsequent years, however, several attempts were made to thoroughly restructure the market. Critics charged that the power of a handful of integrated oil companies was not dissipated through previous antitrust action and ICC regulation. Integrated pipelines were singled out as one of the primary examples of a less-than-competitive petroleum market. In each Congress from 1931 to 1941, members introduced bills to divorce pipelines from integrated oil company control. In 1933, President Roosevelt included a proposal to divest oil companies of their pipeline interests as part of the National Industrial Recovery Act, which the Supreme Court subsequently ruled an unconstitutional delegation of powers.

In 1940, the Department of Justice prepared to bring two suits against integrated pipeline companies. In one case, the Department charged that joint and individual ownership of pipelines by oil companies constituted illegal control over the petroleum crude market. With the outbreak of World War II, the government asked that the suit be put aside until after the hostilities, at which time the government had the case dismissed. In a separate action, the Department prepared to sue integrated pipelines, charging that payments of dividends to owner-shippers was a violation of the Elkins Act, which prohibits rebates to shippers. This suit was also interrupted by the War, but this time the government filed a civil action, and the parties (including 19 major oil companies and 33 pipelines) accepted a consent judgement. The 1941 Consent Decree stipulated that shareholders could receive dividends up to 7% of pipeline investment. Any payments to shareholders in excess of this amount would be treated as an illegal rebate.

The actual effect of the decree is much debated. In essence, a pipeline company's net income must not exceed 7% of its ICC-valued investment.* Transportation charges charges are typically calculated to earn just the maximum return on property. In recent years, the practice of debt-financing has enabled integrated oil pipelines to collect a return on equity far above the 7% level. Some joint venture lines earn from 30% to 50% on equity. These large equity returns do not violate the 1941 Decree, since the ICC-calculated return formula covers only net income divided by net investment in transportation property (including debt-acquired assets).

The Justice Department sought a new court interpretation of the decree which would have considered only equity investment when calculating the 7% limit on shareholder dividends. In 1959, the Supreme Court ruled ruled that after 16 years of implementation basing the 7% limit on total investment (equity plus debt) the Department could not expect the Court to intervene. The Court instructed the Department that the Decree would have to be modified to effect this change. No action has been taken to date.

Oil companies assert that the high equity returns are justified due to the risk involved in pipeline projects. Arguing that since the shipper-owner guarantees the pipeline debt in throughput agreements, these returns are justifiable compensation for such added risk. If the pipelines should be unable to meet their debt obligations, the shareholders must then assure payment.

On the other hand, critics contend that the present ICC return formula permits excessive profits to owner-shippers, thus placing independents at a competitive disadvantage. The likelihood of a pipeline failing, they add, is remote, given that its shareholders have the means to assure a steady flow of crude or product through the system. Furthermore, they assert that the ICC return formula does not accurately judge the true return on pipeline capital. While the assets represented by debt are included in the property valuation, the ICC net income figure does not include interest payments, which represent return on debt-acquired property. Debt should either be removed from the valuation figure, they assert, or interest payments should be made part of the net income figure to represent return on total capital.*

C. Divestiture

The growing move to break-up integrated petroleum companies may make its first step the divestiture of integrated pipelines. Some observers think that, should the general divestiture movement falter, it may still be possible to separate pipelines from other oil company operations.[14] With pipelines operating as truly independent common carriers, these proponents see elimination of many actual or potential abuses. Pointing to the operations of gas pipelines, these parties argue that producer integration into transportation is not needed to insure the financing or successful operation of large-diameter pipeline projects.

Opponents of these moves respond with the assertion that the larger joint venture pipeline projects would not be possible without ownership interest by integrated oil companies. Oil companies, it is said, would be reluctant to enter throughput agreements with pipelines that are independently owned. The larger and more efficient pipelines require a secure petroleum supply that can only be assured through the ownership-participation of large oil companies.

The increasing cost of energy will intensify the debate over divestiture.[15] Changes in the petroleum pipeline industry depend on the outcome of this more general discussion of competition in the overall energy markets.

* Actually, if a pipeline earns a net income exceeding this 7% maximum the amount above this level is typically put into a surplus account. Surplus so-accumulated is not included in future ICC valuation of the pipeline.

* Most financial publications use a return on equity figure to measure a company's financial performance. Some also use a return on total capital—in this case the interest payments on debt are considered part of the return.

TABLE PO-X. Chronology of Government Involvement in Oil Pipeline Transportation, 1903-1975

Date	Event	Comment
1903	Elkins Act	Amends Interstate Commerce Act making rebates to shippers illegal.
1906	Hepburn Act	Oil pipelines are brought under Interstate Commerce Commission (ICC) regulation. The commodity clause contained in this act, which prohibits railroads from transporting products which they produce, is not applied to pipelines.
1911	Supreme Court Decision	Standard Oil Trust broken up into its contituent companies.
1911-1914	Court Decisions	Court upholds ICC attempts to require pipelines to file tariffs as common carriers.
1922	ICC Decision	Commission rules that a pipeline minimum shipment requirement of 100,000 barrels discriminates against smaller users and orders the minimum to be reduced to 10,000 barrels.
1931-1941	Congressional Proposals	Several congressional bills are prepared proposing to divorce pipelines from integrated oil companies.
1933	National Industrial Recovery Act	President Roosevelt includes a proposal to divest oil companies of their pipeline interests. Supreme Court subsequently rules that the Act is unconstitutional.
1934-1941	ICC Investigation	Commission begins proceedings into charges that integrated pipelines are earning excessive profits. In 1940, ICC sets maximum profit of 8% for crude and 10% for products lines. Further investigation suspended because of World War II.
1940	Justice Department Action	Department prepares to bring suit against integrated pipelines charging that high dividends paid to shareholders constitute illegal rebates.
1940-1975	Antitrust Action	Justice Department charges that joint and individual control of pipelines by integrated oil companies represents illegal control over the crude market. Suit is suspended until the end of World War II, at which time the government moves to have the case dismissed.
1941	Consent Decree	Justice Department and major oil companies settle civil action through consent judgement that permits shipper-owners to earn a maximum return of 7% on the valuation of pipeline property; any dividends received in excess of this level would be considered an illegal rebate.
1959	Supreme Court Decision	Court refuses to reinterpret the 1941 Decree to mean a maximum return of 7% on equity investment.
1972-1975	Congressional Proposals	Several proposals are again introduced into Congress seeking divestiture of integrated petroleum companies. In October 1975, such a proposal received 45 votes in the Senate.

2. EL PASO CO has applied for FPC permission to change its gas line into a line carrying Standard Oil of Ohio's (Sohio) crude. However, the Sohio proposal, which requires the transfer of oil from tanker to pipeline in California, is opposed by environmentalists. A consortium of non-integrated companies has proposed an alternate route pipeline linking a delivery point in Washington or British Columbia to the Minnesota-Wisconsin region.

3. For example, READING financed 50% of the Tidewater Co's long-distance pipeline, the first in Pennsylvania. The agreement between the railroad and Tidewater stipulated that the line would not be extended to the sea for eight years, so as not to compete immediately with the railroad.

I. INDUSTRY STRUCTURE

A. Classifications

Freight forwarding is a transportation service that facilitates the movement of small shipments by railroads, ships, trucks, and airplanes.* This service is performed in three stages. First, the forwarder picks up freight from different customers within one area and assembles them into consolidated shipments at a centrally located terminal. Second, these consolidated shipments are turned over to intercity carriers which provide the long-distance transportation at bulk rates. Finally, at the other end of the passage, the forwarder breaks down the consolidated shipment into smaller packages which are then delivered to their respective local destinations. Freight forwarders are considered "indirect carriers" since they primarily utilize the transport service of other intercity carriers.

The freight forwarding industry is divided into two broad classes: surface and air. Surface forwarders utilize motor, rail, and water transportation while air forwarders rely upon commercial airlines to provide intercity transport. Freight forwarding companies are regulated according to the transportation mode primarily utilized in their operations. Consequently, they are subject to regulation by either the Interstate Commerce Commission (ICC), the Federal Maritime Commission (FMC) or the Civil Aeronautics Board (CAB).

In this introduction we discuss only the operations of forwarders regulated by the ICC and CAB. Those marine freight forwarders (also known as non-vessel operating water common carriers or NVO) subject solely to FMC regulation are excluded because that agency does not publicly release comparable information.

B. Transport Geography

Utilizing the services of a variety of transport modes, freight forwarders can handle traffic bound for numerous national and international destinations. However, regulatory restrictions prevent forwarders from serving certain domestic areas (see Section III-B). Pick-up and delivery service does not require an ICC motor carrier operating certificate if it is confined to a geographic area surrounding the forwarder terminal. Air freight forwarders may generally serve an area within a 25-mile radius of their airport terminals. The trucking operations of surface forwarders cannot extend beyond "terminal areas" or "commercial zones" designated by the ICC. Consequently, forwarders cannot serve certain suburban areas without receiving an ICC motor carrier operating certificate.

Air freight forwarder traffic information indicates that more than 90% of domestic traffic moves in an east-west direction.[1] The principal domestic cities of origin or destination are New York, Chicago, and Los Angeles. Since World War II, air forwarders have extended their operations to major foreign cities located principally in the Caribbean and Europe. San Juan, Puerto Rico is the most important city of origin and destination for U.S. international air forwarder traffic.[2] (See Section II-B for discussion of the relative importance of international operations.)

C. Concentration

Several factors make it difficult to precisely determine the degree of concentration in the forwarding industry. Public reports containing financial and operating statistics are not available for all forwarding companies. A number of smaller companies regulated by the CAB and ICC do not file detailed public reports.[3] Thus it is the operations of ICC-regulated Class A companies, with revenues exceeding $100,000, combined with those of CAB-regulated forwarders, with revenues greater than $50,000, which must be taken as the industry total—a figure that reached $1.9 billion in 1974.[4]

According to this definition of the industry, there were more than 280 surface or air forwarding companies in 1974. The forwarding industry thus exhibits a degree of corporate fragmentation second only to that of motor carriers among the transportation modes discussed in this Directory.

The industry is nevertheless concentrated to a significant extent. The largest four operators on the CDE Freight Forwarder Operator Chart received 27.43% of the industry's 1974 revenues and the top eight companies had 38.44%. When market shares are calculated by combining the revenues of commonly-owned operators, the industry's concentration is increased to 35.30% for the largest four and 49.86% for the top eight companies (see Table FF-I).

* A small shipment is a shipment of any commodity that fails to fill the basic unit of transport, such as a railroad car or truck trailer. Also known as less-than-carload (LCL) railroad freight and less-than-truckload (LTL) motor carrier freight, LCL or LTL freight is defined by the Interstate Commerce Commission as any shipment that weighs less than 10,000 pounds.

 "Transport carrier" or "carrier" hereafter refers to those agencies that directly provide intercity transportation of goods (e.g., railroads, trucks, airplanes, etc.).

Concentration is even more pronounced among air freight forwarders. In 1974, the largest four companies had 49.26% and the top eight 71.36% of air forwarder revenues. While the surface sector of the industry is relatively less concentrated, one company received 22.17% of total surface forwarding revenues (see Table FF-II).

D. Corporate Structure

Because freight forwarders are small companies, they are generally not publicly-held. The larger operators, however, tend to issue public stock. Of the 15 operators on the CDE List, 12 are either corporations with publicly-held stock or subsidiaries of public corporations. For the most part, controlling equity in these companies is held by a small number of stockholders (see individual company profiles).

Companies which began their operations in the forwarding industry have generally not diversified to any great extent. An exception is TRANSWAY INTERNATIONAL CORP, one of the largest and oldest surface forwarders, which has expanded into local trucking, marine transportation, trailer manufacturing and natural gas transportation. More recently, however, firms in the trucking and railroad industries have established subsidiaries to operate as surface and air forwarders, thereby bringing corporations with greater financial resources into the forwarding industry.

II. ECONOMIC DYNAMICS

A. Historical Development

The first great expansion of forwarding operations occurred during World War I. At that time, small shipments were handled primarily by railroads as less-than-carload freight (LCL). At first, railroad companies opposed freight forwarders as a threat to their LCL traffic. However, with the expansion of traffic associated with the war effort, railroads relegated the handling of LCL traffic to a secondary position, thus allowing forwarders to expand their services.[5] The difference between the railroad's charge for carload freight and the forwarders charge for small shipments was large enough for forwarders to earn a profit.[6]

The development of motor carrier transportation during the 1920's and 1930's provided the industry with its second wave of growth. Prior to the general use of motor trucks, forwarding operations were generally conducted within the confines of railroad terminals. Through the utilization of trucks, forwarders extended their services to include local pick-up and delivery. Motor carriers also emerged as strong competitors in the small shipment market. In diverting traffic formerly handled by the railroads, motor carriers siphoned off shipments traditionally consolidated by forwarders utilizing railroad transportation. While a number of forwarders began using motor carriers for intercity transportation, the forwarders' profit margin on this traffic was smaller than on its railroad traffic, thereby undermining their financial viability.[7]

The growing importance of air freight service following World War II was the cause of the third period of expansion. Handling mostly shipments possessing a high value per unit of weight, with a premium placed on speed, the number of forwarding companies specializing in air freight increased during the late 1940's and 1950's. Air freight generates a large portion of the small shipment market revenues, relative to its percentage of total tonnage, because shippers pay substantially higher prices in return for faster service. Thus air freight forwarding has emerged as the more dynamic sector of the industry in terms of revenue growth.

B. Market Trends

In assembling small freight into consolidated shipments, freight forwarders offer small shippers an expedited transport service. Generally, the various transport carriers discount their rates for volume shipments. The basis for the forwarder's profit lies in the difference between the lower rate which the forwarder pays to the transport carrier for volume shipments, and the higher rate which the shipper pays to the forwarder for small shipments. (This difference is also known as the forwarder's spread.) At the same time, the carriers which transport the consolidated shipments of freight forwarders are themselves competing for a share of the small shipment market. Hence, freight forwarders are in a contradictory position. On the one hand, they utilize the services of transport carriers; on the other hand, they must compete with these same carriers in the small shipment market. Developments in the freight forwarding industry are therefore closely related to the handling of small shipments by different transport carriers. In effect, forwarders must compete with motor carriers, airlines, railroads, the UNITED PARCEL SERVICE, and the United States Parcel Post.*

Since 1950, the predominant element in the small shipment market has been motor carriers, which handle from 60-80% of tonnage and earn from 40-60% of total small shipment revenues (see Table MF-X). Over the same period, forwarders have continually occupied the second position in the market with 4.5-5.6% of tonnage and 11-16% of revenues (see Table FF-III). The forwarding industry, however, has been marked by uneven development; the surface sector has experienced sluggish growth while the air sector has recorded significant revenue gains.

1. Surface Sector

A number of factors have worked to inhibit the growth of the surface forwarding sector. First, ICC regulations confine forwarders' local pick-up and delivery to terminal areas (see Section III-A). Consequently, forwarders cannot provide full service to shippers which have relocated to urban peripheries or suburban areas. Second, this sector has primarily utilized rail transport and therefore is dependent upon the quality of railroad service. The decline in northeast rail service clearly had some impact on forwarding operations. Finally, motor carrier competition has all but forced the railroads out of the small shipment market and indirectly diverted traffic away from some surface forwarders.

Between 1955 and 1971, annual surface forwarding tonnage fell from 4.7 million to 3.2 million.[8] This long-term stagnation has been offset to some extent by more dynamic growth during the last several years. Between 1971 and 1974 tonnage increased 53% and revenues 78%, a growth which may be attributed, in part, to the increase in household goods handled by forwarders.[9]

* REA Express, formerly an important small shipment competitor, declared bankruptcy in 1975 and was liquidated later that year.

2. Air Sector

Air freight forwarding has been the more dynamic sector of the industry. The impetus for growth has been the rapid expansion of cargo carrying capacity of the commercial airlines. In particular, the introduction of jet freighters during the early 1960's greatly facilitated the handling of air cargo and signaled a large commitment by the airlines to enter the freight market. While the commercial airlines compete for small shipments, the specialized operations of air forwarders represents a distinctive transportation service.

Between 1955 and 1974, air freight forwarders increased their tonnage by more than 400% and their revenues by 3,500%. While airlines handle the bulk of air cargo tons, accounting for approximately 70% of the total, air forwarders have slightly increased their share of air traffic over the decade 1963-1972 (see Table FF-IV). International operations have also expanded during this same decade, but this traffic has not kept up with the expansion of domestic operations (see Table FF-V). In 1972, 85.4% of tonnage and 83.1% of forwarding revenues were generated by domestic business.[10]

3. Inter-Sectoral Dynamics

The relationship between the two sectors of the forwarding industry has changed during the past 20 years. Generating 3.4% of the tonnage handled by forwarders in 1955, the air sector presently accounts for 11.8% of this total. Similarly, air forwarding revenues now represent 36.9% of the total, compared to 4.3% in 1955. However, the more dynamic growth in the surface sector between 1971 and 1974 has partially offset this 25-year trend (see Table FF-VI).

Prospects for the total forwarding industry depend largely upon government regulation, the freight service of transport carriers, and new competition for small shipment traffic. Regulatory changes have been proposed to redefine the ICC prescribed "terminal areas" so that forwarders could serve a greater number of shippers from one terminal (see Section III-A). Both surface and air forwarders would benefit from such a change. Furthermore, government efforts to revitalize the nation's railroad system could conceivably improve surface forwarding service. On the other hand, the expansion of so-called air taxis, which are exempt from CAB regulation and are therefore able to serve select shippers and areas, represents a growing challenge to air forwarders (see Section III-B). All in all, government regulation may well prove to be decisive for the future of the freight forwarding industry.

C. Labor

Detailed information on employment categories, compensation, long-term trends, etc. is not generally available for the total freight forwarding industry. Statistics from the Interstate Commerce Commission indicate that total employment in the surface sector was 11,213 and average compensation per employee was $11,709 in 1974.[11] Comparable data on air forwarders is not published. Seven of the larger air forwarders collectively employed 9,863 persons, a figure which may not be a reliable gauge of total air forwarding employment since it includes a sizeable number engaged in non-forwarding activities.[12]

Based on a survey of reports filed by public companies included in the CDE Directory, the International Brotherhood of Teamsters appears to be the largest union for workers subject to collective bargaining.

D. Technological Developments

Containerization is one of the more important innovations affecting the freight forwarding industry. Freight forwarders commonly utilize different transport carriers to complete delivery of one shipment. Most often trucks are combined with railroads, water carriers and airlines to provide customer-to-customer freight service. Containerization, which refers to both the use of containers and truck-trailers, permits the rapid transfer of freight among different transport carriers and thereby improves forwarding service. (See Railroad Introduction, Section II-E, for a description of containerization.)

Surface forwarders have widely adopted containerization, in particular the use of truck-trailers (piggybacking), to speed service and reduce costs. According to TRANSWAY INTERNATIONAL CORP, the largest surface forwarder, 85% of its domestic freight is transported via piggyback. The ICC has also noted the increasing use of truck-trailers by all surface forwarders. Similarly, the use of intermodal containers has become more common in the air sector. The introduction of jet freighters, especially the all-cargo 747's, permits air forwarders to utilize containers of varying sizes.

Another notable technological development is the increased utilization of sophisticated communication and data-processing equipment. Many larger companies have computerized the tracking of shipments. These systems have become an important element in a business where a large number of small shipments, physically transported by another corporate entity, must be quickly and accurately located.

E. Financial Performance

It is difficult to compare the financial performance of freight forwarders to that of other transport modes. The Interstate Commerce Commission's rate of return figures, which measure the relation of net operating income to net investment in transportation property, cannot be applied to the entire forwarding industry. In the case of air forwarders, it is not possible to distinguish assets directly employed in forwarding from total assets; consequently, a net investment in transportation property cannot be calculated. Furthermore, comparisons between the two forwarding sectors cannot easily be drawn, since the CAB and ICC use different methods of calculating financial returns.* To ascertain the financial performance of the forwarding industry, it is therefore necessary to compare the performance of each sector to that reported for manufacturing.

For both sectors of the industry, the relation of profit to stockholders' equity has been consistently higher than the comparable relation for manufacturing firms. Between 1960 and 1973, the percentage of surface forwarders' net income to stockholders' equity was in the 15-25% range with the exception of 1970, when the industry as a whole reported a deficit. This compares to the 9-13% range reported for manufacturing companies during the same period (see Table FF-VII). Between 1965 and 1972, the percentage of air forwarders' total profit before taxes to stockholders' equity ranged between 30-60%, compared to a 15-20% range for all manufacturing companies (see Table FF-VIII).

The concentration of profits among the largest companies, reflecting the industry's market concentration, is found in both sectors. In 1972, the 12 largest companies had an aggregate profit of $21.77 million. Because of the losses of smaller operators, however, the pre-tax profits of the entire air sector were only $10.27 million (see Table FF-IX). Profits are more evenly distributed in the surface sector, with the largest 12 companies accounting for 54% of the sector's profits.[13]

III. GOVERNMENT INVOLVEMENT

The freight forwarders discussed in this introduction are regulated by either the Interstate Commerce Commission or the Civil Aeronautics Board, depending on which transportation services they primarily use. Forwarders utilizing ICC-regulated railroads, motor carriers, or water carriers are subject to the Commission's authority, while companies that primarily use airlines are CAB-regulated. Since forwarders often arrange for the movement of goods by several different types of transport carriers, a number of companies are regulated by both agencies. In effect, forwarders are regulated in the same manner as other transport carriers. (See Table FF-X for chronology of government involvement.)

A. Market Control

ICC and CAB control over entry to the forwarding industry is not overly restrictive. Perhaps the distinguishing feature of this aspect of forwarding regulation is the relative ease of entry, compared to the regulation of the motor carrier industry (see Motor Carrier—Freight Introduction, Section III-B). The number of Class A surface forwarders more than doubled between 1965 and 1973. In contrast to its regulation of airlines, the CAB does not require that forwarders possess an "operating certificate of public convenience." Beginning in the 1960's, the CAB further relaxed market restrictions by granting air forwarder applications of motor carriers and railroads.

Both agencies exempt certain parties from regulation even though they act, in effect, as freight forwarders. Certain cooperative associations, groups of shippers that consolidate or distribute freight for their members (shipper associations), and parties handling certain agricultural goods (e.g., livestock) are exempt from ICC regulation. In the context of surface forwarding, the operations of these exempt parties are considerable; shipper associations and similar parties tendered 6.8 million tons of freight to railroads, compared to 4.0 million tendered by freight forwarders in 1974.[14]

An exemption contained in the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, which is the basis for air forwarder regulation, applies to the operations of "air taxis." Designed originally to protect the community service of small airlines (air taxis must not operate planeloads which exceed 7,500 lbs.), the exemption has been used by a number of air carriers to offer unregulated air freight service. Federal Express, perhaps the largest of these air taxis, offers national freight service, handling more than 19,000 packages daily and generating annual sales of nearly $100 million. Proposed legislation, supported by both the CAB and the National Industrial Traffic League (an influential shippers' trade association), would allow air taxis to fly planes carrying heavier loads. If enacted, the bill would greatly intensify the competition for air freight.[15]

B. Terminal Areas

The local trucking operations of freight forwarders normally begin or complete a longer transport movement across state lines, and are therefore considered an integral part of interstate commerce. However, the motor carrier operations of both surface and air forwarders are exempt from the ICC's trucking regulations, subject to certain provisions.*

The Commission determines whether a forwarder is eligible for a trucking exemption. Generally, motor carrier operations conducted within ICC-defined "commercial zones" or trucking services radiating 25 miles from an airport terminal are exempt. If a forwarder seeks to expand its trucking service beyond the so-defined terminal areas, it must obtain a motor carrier operating certificate, a process which involves lengthy and expensive ICC hearings (see Motor Carrier—Freight Introduction, Section III-B). While a number of forwarding companies have motor carrier certificates, for the most part the ICC-defined terminal areas determine the scope of the industry's trucking operations.

The development of suburban industrial complexes, and the concomitant movement of industrial concerns out of the central cities, represents a growing problem for the industry. As these shippers relocate to urban peripheries, their plants are beyond the forwarders' terminal areas. Given present regulatory restrictions, it is increasingly difficult for forwarders to serve these relocated shippers. This problem is probably more acute in the surface sector, since many of these forwarders' terminals are located in the older sections of urban areas.

For a number of years, forwarding companies have pressured the ICC to modify its definition of terminal areas to allow for an expansion of exempt trucking operations. In a recent decision, the Commission agreed to expand its "commercial zones," in some cases extending the radius of exempt trucking by 15 miles. The ICC move was opposed by regulated trucking companies, who have now threatened to challenge the decision in court.

* Operations conducted within the area of a community or locality (commercial zone exemption) and trucking service incidental to air transportation (aircraft exemption) apply to surface and air forwarders respectively.

Legislation proposed by the Department of Transportation (under the Ford Administration) would allow air forwarders to conduct motor carrier services within a 100-mile radius of airport terminals.[17] Obviously, these changes would provide a new impetus for forwarder expansion.

2. Ibid., p. 42.

3. CAB-regulated forwarders with less than $50,000 in annual revenues are not required to file certain schedules containing detailed operating and financial information. Similarly, ICC-regulated Class B forwarders, those with less than $100,000 in annual revenues, are generally not included in the Commission's regular statistical reports. In any case, it is not likely that these smaller companies comprise a large part of the forwarder market, as measured in total operating revenues.

4. This figure was obtained by combining the revenues of Class A ICC-regulated forwarders and the larger CAB forwarding companies. Several companies report to both agencies. However this "regulatory overlap" was subtracted out in this total industry figure.

5. At first, railroads refused to quote carload rates on consignments presented to it by freight forwarders. They claimed that these consolidated shipments represented the property of several shippers. In 1911, however, the Supreme Court ruled that railroads could not deny freight forwarders bulk shipment rates. Stuart Daggett, Principles of Inland Transportation, p. 680.

6. Railroad companies acquired a controlling interest in several large freight forwarders. The two largest forwarding companies, Universal Carloading and Distributing Co and National Carloading Corp, with 74% of the industry's 1936 revenues were both controlled by railroads. Concluding its investigation of the industry, the ICC ordered railroad companies to divest themselves of their forwarding interests. Frank L. Barton and R. Bruce McGehee, "Freight Forwarders," Harvard Business Review, Spring 1942, pp. 337-341.

7. The difference between the railroads' published rate for bulk shipments and its rate for LCL traffic was large enough for a forwarding profit. However the rate structure of motor carriers did not provide for such a "spread." Freight forwarders consequently negotiated with motor carriers for rates below the published charge. This practice was eventually declared to be illegal by the courts during the 1930's, resulting in the bankruptcy of a number of forwarding firms.

TABLE FF-X. Chronology of Government Involvement in Freight Forwarding, 1911-1977

Date	Event	Comment
1911	U.S. Supreme Court Decision	Court rules that railroads cannot deny forwarders bulk shipment rates. Freight forwarding consequently becomes an economically viable operation.
1935-1938	Interstate Commerce Commission (ICC) Decision	Following the establishment of ICC trucking regulation, the Commission prohibits the practice of rate divisions between trucks and forwarders. These "joint-rate" agreements had been widely used since the 1920's to insure that forwarders earned a profit on their motor carrier shipments.
1936-1938	ICC Investigation	In a general review of the surface forwarding industry, the Commission found special concessions, rebates, payoffs and other questionable practices to be common in rail-forwarder relations. Consequently, the Commission ordered railroad companies to sell their investment in freight forwarders.
1938	Civil Aeronautics Act	Although forwarders were not specifically mentioned in legislation authorizing federal regulation of the airline industry, this act became the legal basis for subsequent air forwarder regulation.
1941-1942	Civil Aeronautics Board Decision	Railway Express Agency (REA) allowed to provide air express service as indirect air carrier. In a subsequent decision, the CAB refused similar authority to another applicant, thereby leaving REA as the only authorized air forwarder until 1948.
1942-1950	Amendments to the Interstate Commerce Act	In 1942, surface forwarders become ICC regulated. In a 1950 Amendment, forwarders are defined as common carriers, thereby permitting them to effect joint-rate agreements with motor carriers.
1948	CAB Decision	CAB approves numerous applications from companies seeking to operate as air forwarders. Authorizations are issued on a temporary basis and regulatory and operating requirements are established.
1955	CAB Decision	After a review of the air forwarding industry, CAB extends existing authorizations indefinitely. Market restrictions are relaxed and railroad subsidiaries are granted air forwarder authorizations.
1964-1968	CAB Decision	CAB further relaxes its market restriction allowing motor carrier subsidiaries to operate as air forwarders.
1973-1974	ICC and CAB Decisions	Commission decides not to renew special shipping agreements made between REA and other regulated carriers. The following year, the CAB reaches a similar decision. Thereafter, forwarders can compete more easily against REA.
1977	ICC Decision	Commission redefines its "commercial zones" allowing forwarders to expand their regulation-exempt trucking operations.

Water Carriers

I. INDUSTRY STRUCTURE

A. Classifications

The U.S. waterborne transportation industry is divided into two broad categories: domestic and international. (See Table WC-I for breakdown of classifications.) Unlike other transport modes, however, detailed financial and operating statistics on the largest corporations active in this industry are not generally available. This is due to the fact that the vast majority of water carriers are not subject to public utility-type regulation.

1. Domestic Transport

Domestic water transportation is performed on inland rivers, the Great Lakes, coastal waters and on ocean routes between the mainland and outlying U.S. states or territories such as Alaska, Hawaii, and Guam (domestic offshore). Transportation on these routes is restricted to U.S.-flag carriers, which are ships owned by U.S. incorporated companies, manned by U.S. crews, and registered under the marine laws of this country. The Interstate Commerce Commission (ICC) regulates carriers operating on inland, Great Lakes, and coastal routes. Domestic offshore transport is subject to Federal Maritime Commission (FMC) authority. While waterborne carriers are regulated in a way similar to railroads and motor carriers, exemptions are numerous—ships transporting their own goods (private carriers) and vessels hauling no more than three bulk commodities in one trip are unregulated. The overwhelming majority of domestic water carrier ton-miles is generated by unregulated carriers.[1]

2. International Transport

Carriers participating in the U.S. international trade travel between points in this country and the rest of the world. Both U.S. and foreign-flag carriers participate in this market. A significant number of ships flying the flags of other nations are actually owned by U.S. companies (see Section I-C). The FMC has jurisdiction over some aspects of international shipping but does not exercise classic transportation regulatory authority.

3. Carrier Types

The U.S. fleet consists of a variety of vessels including tugs and barges that ply inland rivers, special ships fitted for Great Lakes service, and ocean-going vessels in the coastal, domestic offshore, and foreign trades. Carriers are also classified according to the type of traffic handled. Bulk carriers generally transport mineral or agricultural products and are subdivided into dry-bulk carriers, which haul ore or grain, and liquid-bulk carriers, which transport petroleum or liquified natural gas. General cargo carriers handle various manufactured goods and specialized carriers haul specific commodities such as sugar, automobiles, or lumber.

B. Transport Geography

The 25,000 miles of navigable waterways make the U.S. system the second largest in the world. The main artery of this waterway network is the Mississippi River System, which includes the Mississippi, Illinois, Missouri, and Ohio rivers. This 9,000 mile waterway connects Chicago, which sits at the foot of Lake Michigan, to the Gulf Coast port of New Orleans. The Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Seaway System is the nation's second most important waterway. This system extends more than 2,000 miles from western Lake Superior to the Atlantic Ocean, and more than 90% of its 95,000 square miles are navigable. The Lakes serve both the domestic industrial northeast traffic and provide a water route for grain exports. Atlantic, Gulf, and Pacific intracoastal waterways constitute the remainder of the system with more than 15,000 route miles. Most of the inland waterway traffic, however, travels on the Mississippi and Great Lakes which accounted for more than 75% of ton-miles in 1974.

U.S. waterborne foreign trade depends primarily upon Third World countries for imports and developed countries for exports. South America, the Caribbean, and Middle East accounted for more than half of 1975 imported tonnage, while Japan, Northern Europe, and Canada received the majority of U.S. exported tonnage (see Table WC-II). This international trade is primarily centered around the Gulf and Atlantic ports; the two regions received more than 75% of total foreign trade tonnage handled in 1973 (see Table WC-III). Furthermore, 8 of the 10 largest port cities are located on these two coasts (see Table WC-IV).

C. Concentration

It is difficult to measure corporate concentration in the U.S. water transportation markets. In the first place, although foreign-flag carriers predominate in U.S. international trade, these carriers are not required to submit detailed financial reports to U.S. authorities. Second, while domestic offshore trade is regulated by the FMC, that agency does not publicly release the financial and operating information it collects. Finally, of the small segment of the industry that is ICC-regulated, figures for 1974 indicate that the top four and eight operators had 43.38% and 61.52% respectively of total ICC-regulated revenues (see Table WC-V).

1. I—primarily inland waterways carrier including river and/or Great Lakes service; O—primarily ocean carrier including international, domestic offshore and/or coastal service; I/O—both inland waterways and ocean carrier.

2. The number of vessels and capacity figures correspond to the total water carrier operations of the ultimate parent unless otherwise indicated. The number of vessels operated under foreign flags, when known, is indicated in parenthesis. Abbreviations: BBLS—barrels; CFT—cubic feet; CTN—containers (or barges in the case of LASH ships); CTNS—containership; DWT—deadweight tons; GT—gross tons; LASH—"lighter-aboard-ship" vessel; NT—net tons; REEFER—refrigerated ship; TBF—tanker/bulk carrier/freighter; VSL—vessel.

3. Legal counsels are those firms which received the largest fees from the subsidiary operator in 1974. All $ figures in thousands.

4. Regulated by the ICC.

5. Regulated by the FMC.

6. Regulated by the ICC and FMC.

7. Figure(s) for subsidiary operator.

8. The number of vessels and total DWT do not include a 29,700 DWT petroleum barge owned by a partnership in which Company has a 50% interest, and a number of foreign-flag vessels aggregating 925,000 DWT which are "chartered-in" by Company on a long-term basis.

9. Operating revenue includes international freight forwarding and export-import operations, but does not include the operating revenue of Waterman Marine Corp, which totalled $92,975 in 1974. The number of vessels does not include 3 tankers owned (2 under foreign flag) and 2 chartered by Company's Tropigas International Corp subsidiary, which are used for the transportation of liquified petroleum gas.

10. Operating revenue includes shipyard operations but not the operating revenue of Pacific Norse Shipping Ltd, which totalled $17,110 in 1974. Company's share of Pacific Norse's net earnings was $2,202.

D. Corporate Structure

Given the preponderance of private carriers and the variety of inland, coastal, and international operators, it is difficult to generalize about the corporate structure of the industry. The largest operators, however, are typically public corporations or subsidiaries of such companies, with shipping representing but one of their activities. A number of the largest shipping fleets are owned by U.S. conglomerates (see CDE Operator Chart).

Perhaps the most conspicuous feature of the industry's corporate structure is the establishment of foreign subsidiaries that operate under so-called "flags of convenience." In a practice that became common after World War II, many U.S. companies used flag of convenience vessels to avoid the higher labor and maintenance costs associated with U.S.-flag shipping. Under the direction of a former U.S Secretary of State, Edward R. Stettinius, maritime specialists formulated Liberia's registry laws that have since attracted large fleets of many countries.[2] These laws provide ship operators with anonymity, flexibility in hiring crews of many nations, and freedom from stringent safety standards. While Liberia is not a major sea power, its registered merchant fleet is the largest in the world. Approximately one-third of this tonnage is owned by U.S. shipping interests. The bulk of U.S.-controlled foreign-flag shipping deadweight tonnage is owned by large oil companies such as EXXON, TEXACO, and MOBIL (see Table WC-VI).*

With 706 ships having a combined 52.8 million dead-\ weight tonnage (dwt), the U.S.-owned foreign-flag fleet dwarfs the 18 million dwt U.S.-flag fleet.[3] Combining these two fleets, U.S. shipping interests appear to control nearly 10% of the world's merchant vessel deadweight tonnage.

II. ECONOMIC DYNAMICS

A. Market Trends

Domestic waterway carriers compete primarily with railroads along inland routes and with pipelines along the coast. In the domestic offshore and foreign trades, water carriers are practically the only transport means. While airlines have become more active in the international freight market, water carriers still account for 99% of the tonnage transported abroad.

Though the majority of U.S. waterborne traffic continues to be generated by domestic trade, international tonnage handled at U.S. ports is expanding at a faster rate. Between 1950 and 1973, U.S. waterborne international traffic grew from 169 million to 767 million tons while domestic traffic grew from 651 million to 994 million tons during the same period (see Table WC-VII). Similarly, U.S. ocean transport, which includes both domestic offshore and international, is increasingly oriented towards foreign markets. By 1974, foreign trade accounted for three-fourths of total U.S. ocean trade tonnage, while in 1947 it represented a little more than half the total.[4]

Between 1950 and 1973, ton-miles carried by inland waterway carriers increased by 119% (see Table WC-VIII). This traffic growth, however, was not evenly distributed among the different waterway routes. While the Mississippi River System's ton-miles transported expanded from 33.6 billion to 155.3 billion between 1950 and 1973, traffic on the Great Lakes, which formerly represented the bulk of the inland total, showed a much smaller increase moving from 120.3 billion to 125.9 billion (see Table WC-IX). Overall, inland water carriers' share of the domestic intercity freight market has remained stable between 1950 and 1973, presently representing approximately 16% of the total.

The U.S.-flag fleet has been unable to capitalize on the growing importance of waterborne imports and exports. For more than two decades, foreign-flag carriers have captured an increasing share of this market. In 1950, U.S.-flag ships transported 39.3% of the United States' total foreign trade tonnage. After a steady decline, the U.S. fleet's share dropped to 6.4% by 1973 (see Table WC-X). Losing international traffic to foreign-flag carriers combined with the relatively stagnant growth in the domestic ocean trades, have been primary factors in the reduction of the U.S. fleet.[5]

The fortunes of the U.S.-flag fleet may be considerably improved in the near future. When the Alaskan pipeline begins operations in mid-1977, a good deal of the 1.2 million barrels of crude a day will be transported in U.S. tankers. After the crude is transported via pipeline to the Alaskan port of Valdez, tankers will then be employed to carry the oil to refineries on the West Coast or on the Gulf Coast. Under the Merchant Marine Act of 1920 (also known as the "Jones Act"), only U.S.-flag carriers can participate in the coastal trades. Thus Alaskan oil is expected to generate a boon for the U.S. maritime industry.[6] EXXON, Standard of Ohio, and other companies have already taken steps to expand their U.S U.S.-flag tanker fleets to accomodate Alaskan oil.[7]

A proposed revision of the Jones Act would also improve future prospects. Unlike other domestic offshore routes, traffic between the Virgin Islands and the mainland U.S. is not subject to Jones Act restrictions. After much pressure from the U.S. maritime industry, removal of this exemption now appears likely. If enacted, the Amerada Hess refinery located in the Virgin Islands, which is the largest refinery in North America, will have to ship its petroleum products in U.S. tankers.[8]

B. Traffic Composition

Water carriers are primarily a means for transporting freight. Less than 1% of the domestic and foreign passenger markets are represented by waterborne travel.[9] The vast majority of both domestic and foreign U.S. waterborne tonnage is generated by the transportation of mineral and agricultural products known as bulk commodities. With the exception of the Great Lakes regions, where iron ores represented 42.4% of total tonnage, oil was the most important commodity for inland water carriers in 1974, representing more than half the total tonnage (see Table WC-XI). The domestic ocean trade generated more than three-fourths of its tonnage from oil-related transport.[10] As a result of the growing demand for imported energy, 40% of foreign tonnage is generated by oil tankers (see Table WC-XII).

* Deadweight tonnage is measured in long tons and is the difference between a vessel's loaded and lightweight displacement.

C. Labor

Employment in the shipping industry has generally declined since World War II. While a detailed breakdown of of industry employment according to categories of seamen, longshoremen, etc., is not available, total industry employment was 209,000 in 1974 compared to 230,000 in 1965.[11] Available statistics on longshoremen and merchant seamen indicate a sharper drop. With the decline of the U.S. ocean-going fleet, merchant vessel employment dropped from 56.6 thousand to 24.8 thousand between 1950 and 1974.[12] Comparable figures for inland water carriers are not published, although ICC-regulated carriers reportedly employed a little more than than 8,000 persons during the past five years.[13]

The introduction of containerized service has greatly reduced employment opportunities for longshoremen. Approximately 50,000 longshoremen currently work at U.S. ports; in 1952, the Port of New York alone employed 50,000 workers.[14]

Unions are a prominent feature of the shipping industry with employees represented by several different organizations such as the International Longshoremen's Association, International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, Seafarers International Union, National Maritime Union, International Organization of Masters, Mates, and Pilots, and the National Marine Engineers' Beneficial Association. Among the unions' major efforts are attempts to mitigate the effects of containerization on dock labor and the support of government action to revive the U.S.-flag fleet.

D. Technological Change

A number of relatively recent technological developments have expanded cargo volume per transport unit, boosted labor productivity, and reduced transit time. While most of these improvements have affected ocean transport, freight carriage on inland waterways has also undergone change. Tugboat horsepower increased almost 40% between 1967 and 1973.[15] Water carriers now employ lighter-aboard-ship (LASH) and sea-barge (SEABEE) to improve transfer of cargo from inland to ocean vessels without docking. The LASH and SEABEE concept permits ocean vessels to load on barges which have been towed out to sea by tugs. Thus both time and added costs are saved by avoiding dockside loading and unloading.

Containerization was first introduced into regular shipping service in 1966 and has radically transformed the movement of general cargo in the international shipping trades. Employing container boxes which can be quickly transferred from ship-to-rail or ship-to-truck, time-consuming and expensive cargo handling is avoided. In a variation on the same principle, roll-on and roll-off (Ro-Ro) vessels use truck-trailers in the place of containers. RoRo does not require that ships or ports be equipped with expansive container cranes and the trailers are moved via a ramp. Between 1971 and 1974, tonnage carried in containers rose by more than 250% and in sharp contrast to their share of other traffic, more than 40% of this 1974 tonnage was generated by U.S.-flag carriers (see Table WC-XIII).

Containerization has made possible new intermodal transportation services known as "landbridge" and "minibridge" which facilitate cargo movements between the Far East, North America, and Europe. In landbridge, ships provide Pacific and Atlantic Ocean transport while railroads transport the containers between the U.S. East and West coasts. In minibridge, the Atlantic ocean leg is eliminated, with ships moving between the Far East and the West Coast while railroads carry containers between inland U.S. points. As the more important of the two services, minibridge has been opposed by Gulf and Atlantic Coast port interests because it reduces use of their harbor facilities.[16] Both intermodal services have the advantage of reducing transit times by several days.

The modern supertankers are the largest man-made moving objects. Both the very-large-crude-carriers (VLCC) which have a 140,000 dwt capacity, and the ultra-large-crude-carriers (ULCC) with more than 250,000 dwt capacity, reduce unit transport costs. The largest tanker presently afloat has a capacity of 540,000 dwt allowing it to carry 170 million gallons of oil. In contrast, the tankers of World War II vintage, such as the T-2, had a capacity of 16,000 dwt.

These large tankers, however, are not yet an important factor in transporting crude to the United States. The configuration of the continental shelf along the Atlantic and Gulf coasts does not permit these large crude carriers to approach their ports and only one harbor in the United States, located in the Puget Sound, can potentially handle VLCC or ULCC tankers in the near future. A consortium of oil companies proposes to construct offshore oil terminals which will permit the supertankers to be used for U.S. crude imports. The planned Gulf Coast deepwater ports, known as Seadock and Loop, will pump crude out of the giant tankers and transport it to the shore via an underwater pipeline. As planned, the two ports will have a prospective combined maximum ability to handle 7.5 million barrels of crude per day which is more than twice the capacity of the Alaskan oil pipeline.

F. Financial Performance

Because of the lack of comprehensive financial data on the U.S. water carrier industry, it is not possible to characterize the overall industry performance. Detailed financial statistics are only present for those companies reporting to either the Securities and Exchange Commission or the ICC. The FMC does not release financial information on the companies solely within its jurisdiction.

The revenues of ICC-regulated water carriers have fluctuated between 1955 and 1974, more than doubling in the five-year period 1970-1974.[17] Return on investment and equity during these years averaged more than 10% and 13% respectively (see Table WC-XIV).

III. GOVERNMENT INVOLVEMENT

A. Financial Assistance

The water carrier industry has benefited from federal aid for more than 150 years. The earliest assistance dates back to the beginning of the 19th century when the government began a program of waterway improvements. Assistance to carriers engaged in foreign trade did not become important until the 1930's when the U.S.-flag fleet proved unable to compete with foreign-flag carriers. While other transport modes received federal aid primarily during their formative periods, federal subsidies have been an enduring feature of the water carrier industry.

Inland water carriers utilize federally constructed and maintained waterway systems. The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers is primarily responsible for maintaining navigational rights-of-way and undertaking the construction of new routes. In a program that began in 1824, the Corps expended an estimated $9 billion in support of navigation by the end of fiscal 1975.[18] In contrast to its highway support, the federal government provides funds for both construction and maintenance purposes. While total expenditures have been divided 63% for construction and 33% for maintenance, in recent years operations and maintenance costs have surpassed monies spent for capital improvements.[19]

Federal financing of waterway expenditures differs in one important respect from funding applied to other modes. Both airlines and motor carriers pay user fees which contribute to airway and highway financing. Except for tolls levied on St. Lawrence Seaway users, inland carriers are not required to pay any user charges. Consequently, other transport modes, especially the railroads, have argued for several decades that the government should institute waterway user charges.

With the passage of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936, the federal government has attempted to improve the competitiveness of U.S.-flag carriers engaged in international trade through the distribution of subsidies. In a program administered by the Federal Maritime Administration, the government provides support to the shipbuilding industry through a construction differential subsidy (CDS) and to carriers through an operating differential subsidy (ODS). Payments under both programs have amounted to nearly $6 billion with the bulk of this total expended since 1955.[20] During the fiscal year 1975, the government paid out nearly $600 million under the DCS and ODS programs.

In addition to direct financial assistance under subsidy programs the government provides other assistance to the the U.S.-flag fleet. Under a Federal Mortgage Insurance Program, the government guarantees private loans to finance shipbuilding which, according to one estimate, will amount to $7 billion in outstanding securities by the end of 1978.[21] The government also requires that all military-related traffic, 50% of foreign aid movements and other traffic generated by the government be carried in U.S. vessels.

Federal subsidization of the U.S. maritime industry has been criticized as fostering industry inefficiency. While the program has been justified by some on national defense grounds, other observers believe that national benefits of the elaborate subsidy programs are dubious.[22] The trend in recent years, however, has been to greatly expand the subsidy programs. The Merchant Marine Act of 1970 provided operating subsidies to bulk carriers transporting ore and grain, which were previously not included in the old program. This Act also attempted to encourage greater shipbuilding efficiency by progressively reducing the federal government's share of costs from 50% to 35%. However, the shipbuilding industry claimed that it could not remain competitive under the reduced ceilings and President Ford signed a bill to restore the 50% maximum.[23]

B. Regulation

Federal regulation was gradually extended to the water carrier industry in a number of legislative measures enacted between 1887 and 1940 (see Table WC-XV). While the ICC had jurisdiction over certain aspects of water carrier operations as early as 1887, federal regulation was not applied to a significant part of the industry until the Shipping Act of 1916. The present lines of regulatory authority were established after the Transportation Act of 1940 was passed.

1. Interstate Commerce Commission

ICC regulation of inland and coastal shipping was instituted under the Transportation Act of 1940. Pressure from railroads to have the Commission control inland water carrier rates was perhaps the most important factor in extending ICC authority. The Act, however, contained numerous exemptions that leave more than 90% of the industry unregulated. Excluded from federal control are private carriers, ships hauling no more than three commodities during one trip, tank vessels carrying liquid bulk commodities, and such other operations as tugboat service within one harbor, ferries, etc.

Common carriers by water are regulated in much the same way as railroads and motor carriers. Carriers must obtain certificates of public convenience and necessity and rates are subject to Commission review. The ICC does not, however, have control over abandonment of service nor does it subject common carriers to financial regulation. Contract carrier regulation is even less inclusive. The Commission does not attempt to regulate maximum rates but only requires that carriers submit minimum rates for Commission review. In practice, water carrier rates have paralleled those of railroads.[24]

2. Federal Maritime Commission

The FMC regulation of domestic offshore and international shipping was previously performed by a number of predecessor bodies. The Shipping Act of 1916 created the Shipping Board to regulate coastal and international shipping. This Act, in effect, protected shipping conferences, which are similar to railroad or motor carrier rate bureaus, from antitrust prosecution. (See Motor Carrier–Freight Introduction, Section III-B for discussion of rate bureaus.) Certain practices of the conferences were made illegal, however, such as rebating and other measures used to retaliate against independent carriers.* While regulation was performed by an independent agency during earlier years, a bureau within the Department of Commerce performed these duties for several decades. It was not until an executive reorganization which created the Federal Maritime Commission in 1961 that regulation was once again administered by

* One of these practices was the use of so-called "fighting ships." If an independent attempted to charge rates below those set by the conference, the larger carriers would subsidize a "fighting ship" which would appear in port offering lower rates whenever the independent attempted to solicit traffic.

Shipping conferences organized around trade between the United States and the rest of the world are subject to FMC scrutiny. Carriers do not have to become conference members and admission cannot be denied to those seeking to join. The FMC surveys conference rates and polices practices to insure against rebating. In return for this regulation, conference members are protected from possible antitrust prosecution.

In recent years, there has been growing concern with the operations of shipping conferences. The entrance of the Soviet Union into the U.S.-Far East cargo trade as a major competitor in 1975 served as a catalyst for renewed scrutiny of conference practices. The Soviet shipping lines refused to join the conferences because of widespread rebating, and the Soviets claimed that their lower rates were not predatory. Conference members responded with the assertion that rebating was a direct result of the Soviets' lower prices. The FMC acted by beginning an investigation of rebating practices and started negotiating with the Soviets to raise their rates and join the conferences.

During the first half of 1975, the FMC levied $132,000 in fines on more than a dozen shippers or shipping companies for rebating or other rate irregularities.[25] By the following year, the FMC pressure resulted in new revelations of rebating including the disclosure by Sea-Land Service Inc that it made $19 million in "possibly illegal" payments between 1971 and 1975.[26] After convincing the Soviets that it would seriously enforce anti-rebating measures, the FMC successfully worked out an agreement whereby the Soviet ship lines would gradually join the various conferences.

While a major rate war may have been avoided, the controversy is not over. An antitrust division of the Justice Department is pressing its investigation of shipping operations on the Atlantic trade routes and a federal grand jury has begun to serve subpoenas on a number of lines.[27] The Justice Department has also indicated that it is looking at the recent U.S.-Soviet accord for possible antitrust violations.[28]

TABLE WC-XV. Government Involvement in Water Carrier Transportation, 1887-1976

Date	Event	Comment
1887	Interstate Commerce Act	ICC given authority to regulate rail-ship transport movements in interstate commerce.
1912	Panama Canal Act	Prohibits railroad ownership of water carriers using Panama Canal for intercoastal transport.
1916	Shipping Act of 1916	United States Shipping Board created as an independent body to review operations of common carriers in domestic offshore, foreign, and Great Lakes service.
1920	Merchant Marine Act of 1920	Sometimes referred to as the Jones Act, restricts coastal and domestic offshore shipping to U.S.-flag carriers.
1933	Intercoastal Shipping Act	Contract carriers participating in the domestic offshore trade are brought under Shipping Board's authority.
1933	Executive Order	United States Shipping Board becomes a bureau within the Department of Commerce.
1936	Merchant Marine Act of 1936	United States Maritime Commission created to replace Shipping Board. Federal subsidy program for U.S.-flag merchant marine is launched, including operational and construction payments.
1940	Transportation Act of 1940	Regulation of water carriers extended to those operating on inland waterways. ICC regulates inland, Great Lakes, and coastal carriers. Maritime Commission regulates domestic offshore and international shipping.
1950	Executive Order	Federal Maritime Board assumes functions of United States Maritime Commission and is placed in the Department of Commerce.
1961	Executive Order	Federal Maritime Board becomes the Federal Maritime Commission which is organized as an independent regulatory agency.
1970	Merchant Marine Act of 1970	Federal operating subsidies extended to bulk carriers transporting ore or grain. Construction subsidy program also expanded. Federal share of maximum shipbuilding costs is projected to decrease progressively from 50% to 35% on negotiated contracts.
1970	Water Quality Improvement Act of 1970	U.S. Coast Guard given authority to enforce standards designed to protect water environment from oil spills and other hazardous materials.
1976	Congressional Bill	Maximum federal subsidy support on negotiated shipbuilding contracts is restored to 50%.

Part Two

Introduction

Part One presents a list of the largest operators in eight different transportation sectors of the United States. These CDE Sample Operators are ranked by revenues and listed with their parents in the eight CDE Operator Charts appearing at the beginning of each sector chapter.

All companies profiled in this Part of the Directory appear in alphabetical sequence. All corporate names printed in UPPER CASE letters refer to one of these profiled companies. Each profile consists of two sections: a ranking of the company's principal voting stockholders, and basic factual and financial information on the company. A key to abbreviations and symbols can be found at the beginning of the Directory.

The CDE's main objective is to identify the principal individual and institutional voting stockholders of the largest U.S. transportation companies or their parents. Sample transportation operators which are subsidiaries of another company are considered as components of one corporate complex and only the ultimate parent is profiled. For the purposes of this study a parent is defined as a corporation which owns 40% or more of an operator's voting stock. Consequently, a number of large corporations which are not principally transportation firms are nevertheless profiled in this Directory because they are parents of transportation operators.

The profiled companies can be divided into three types:[1]

1. Ultimate parents (73): a corporation controlling either directly or through intermediaries 40% or more of the voting stock of a sample transportation operator. For example, IU INTERNATIONAL CORP is profiled because it controls Pacific Intermountain Express Co, a sample motor carrier, through its 100%-owned intermediary IU Transportation Services Inc. In the case of joint ventures, both ultimate parents of the operator have been profiled.

2. Self-Parented Transportation Companies (95): sample transportation operators with less than 40% of their stock owned by another corporation.

3. Certain Transportation Subsidiaries (8): eight sample operators which are between 40% and 90% owned by another corporate entity have been profiled because their remaining stock is publicly traded and the CDE has identified other individual and institutional stockholders. In these cases both the parents and operators are profiled.

STOCKHOLDER INFORMATION

The profiles present for each company the principal holders of stock which can be identified from publicly available sources. As the CDE is concerned first and foremost with voting power, the study covers any class of stock with voting rights, including preferred. Companies sometimes issue more than one class of stock with different votes per share. In order to compare holdings of different classes, all figures are expressed in votes and not in shares.[2] For instance, in a company with two classes of voting stock, a common with 1 vote/share and a preferred with 2 votes/share, a bank with 1,000 common and 500 preferred will appear in the CDE profile with 2,000 votes.

Unless otherwise indicated, all stockholdings are quoted as of January 1, 1975 (see How to Read a Profile for an explanation of offdating). Particularly significant changes in the largest holdings since that date are noted under the heading "Comments" in each company profile.

There were five basic steps in compiling the stockholder information for each company:

The CDE collected its stockholder data from a variety of public sources, including:

1) Reports submitted by profiled companies, and institutional or individual stockholders to federal agencies, including the Securities and Exchange Commission, Civil Aeronautics Board, Federal Communications Commission, Federal Power Commission, Interstate Commerce Commission, Internal Revenue Service and Comptroller of the Currency.

2) Reports submitted by institutional investors to

Collection of stockholder data from various public sources
Step 2
Elimination of nominees by attributing their aggregated holdings to the institutions they represent
Step 3
Aggregation of holdings by family relations or intercorporate control
Step 4
Categorization of holdings by management powers:
1) total voting
2) total managed
3) unidentified
Step 5
Ranking of holders by one of the following in descending order:
1) voting power
2) total managed holdings
3) management powers not identified

state agencies, such as the state insurance departments

3) Reports voluntarily disclosed to the public by some institutional investors, such as state-chartered banks.

4) Special stock ownership studies by regulatory agencies and congressional committees, such as those of the Senate Subcommittee on Reports, Accounting and Management.

The CDE selected holders with at least 2/10ths of 1 percent (0.2 percent) of a profiled company's voting stock. In the case of very large companies with widely dispersed stock, this cut-off point was sometimes lowered to 0.15 percent.[3] The most important types of holders include:

- —brokers, such as Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith
- —commercial banks, such as Chase Manhattan Bank, NA
- —educational endowments, such as Harvard University
- —individuals and families, including directors, officers, and estates, such as the Rockefeller Family Interests
- —industrial corporations, such as Superior Oil Co
- —insurance companies, such as Metropolitan Life Insurance Co
- —investment companies (e.g., mutual funds), such as Dreyfus Fund
- — non-profit institutions, particularly foundations, such as Ford Foundation
- —pension funds and other employee benefit plans, such as New York State Teachers' Retirement System

The stockholder information collected in Step 1 could not be listed in its raw form. Nominees present a particular problem in identifying stockholdings. They are mere legal conveniences which act as record holders for commercial banks and other financial institutions. A financial institution may also use several nominees to hold stock in one company. In Step 2 CDE purged each institution's nominees from its list and aggregated their holdings, which were then attributed to the institution.[4] For instance, Chemical Bank holds stock in NORFOLK & WESTERN RY CO through eight nominees, such as Finman & Co, C.A. England & Co, and others. The total holdings of these nominees are listed by the CDE under Chemical Bank.

A number of stockholders that are not mere legal conveniences but real institutions such as insurance companies and mutual funds, are in fact controlled by other entities. Holders linked to the same entity are therefore grouped as part of one complex and individually listed under their "ultimate parent" (see How to Read a Profile). The CDE applied two standards to form such complexes:

1. Family Relations: The components of a single family, including relatives, estates, and family-controlled foundations and partnerships, are combined into one family holding. Companies known to be 40% or more owned by members of one family are grouped with these family interests.

2. Intercorporate Control: Control of one corporation by another is defined in two ways:

a. Ownership of 40% or more of the company's voting stock.[5]

b. Management[6] of one firm by another, such as the management of mutual funds by an investment advisor, and pension funds by commercial banks. All identified funds managed by the same advisor are grouped together.

In certain cases a complex of holders involves both management and ownership control. The listing of each sub-entity indicates its control relationship to the ultimate parent.

Commercial bank trust department and brokerage firms specialize in holding stock for other parties such as pension funds, mutual funds, individuals, and estates. Both these financial institutions may exercise certain management powers over the stock they hold including voting authority (power to vote shares), investment discretion (authority to buy/sell stock), investment advice (authority to recommend the purchase/sale of stock), and/or other trustee authority. In the case of nationally-chartered commercial banks, the CDE has determined those stockholdings over which the bank exercises any management power, and that portion of these "managed holdings" over which it exercises voting power.[7]

Brokerage firms and most state-chartered banks, on the other hand, do not report their management powers and the CDE has listed their stockholdings under the category of "additional holdings." Such listings are not synonymous with unmanaged holdings. The brokerage firm or state-chartered bank may, in fact, exercise some management authority but this could not be determined on the basis of public information.[8] In addition, a number of nationally-chartered banks also have stock listed under this category. Such stock is held for accounts where the bank does not exercise any management powers and where the CDE was unable to identify who does possess such authority.[9]

The CDE has not totaled the stock listed in the "additional holdings" column because of inevitable duplication with stock listed under "managed holdings." For example, an individual appearing in a CDE profile may hold stock through a brokerage firm. In this case, the brokerage firm's "additional holdings" will invariably include the stock already attributed to the individual. In the case of commercial banks, such duplications have been minimized, whenever possible, through a discounting process. For example, suppose that Bank A holds 100,000 shares of Widget Co over which it does not have any management power. Mutual Fund B reports that it has a 50,000 share investment in Widget Co. Furthermore, the fund also reveals that it holds stock through Bank A. In this case, CDE discounts the mutual fund's stock from the bank's total holdings, leaving Bank A with a 50,000 entry in "additional holdings."

All holdings are ranked according to one of the three categories referred to in Step 4. Each profile first ranks

❶ RANK: Holdings ranked by one of the following in descending order—voting power, total managed holdings, and management power not identified. Note: figures in all columns are expressed in votes.

❸ EMPLOYEE BENEFIT PLAN: Includes thrift, savings, stock purchase and similar private plans that facilitate acquisition of stock by company employees. Excludes stock option plans limited solely to "key employees" such as officers/directors. Each plan entry is arranged to indicate how these shares are voted. In the hypothetical example below, the Widget Co Thrift Plan holds 1,000 shares of Widget Co stock for 25 plan participants.

Voting	CDE Entry
Company votes	Widget Co Thrift Plan (Internal Administration or Trustee)
Bank trustee votes	ABC Bank NA Widget Co Thrift Plan (1000)
Participants vote	Widget Co Thrift Plan (25 Participants)

❹ OFFDATING: All holdings are for 1/1/75 unless followed by a letter which indicates the following dates:

1st Quarter	W	X	A	E
2nd Quarter			B	F
3rd Quarter		Y	C	G
4th Quarter			D	H

❺ CDE PROFILED COMPANY: Denotes holder which is itself profiled in Part Two.

❻ PUBLIC EMPLOYEE PENSION FUNDS: Identifies the administrator of state, county, and municipal public retirement systems.

❼ TYPE OF STOCKHOLDER: A symbol used by the CDE to characterize certain stockholders. Indicates the principal activity of financial institutions whose corporate names do not contain key words such as "bank" and "insurance." The following four symbols are used:

< Diversified holding company
+ Investment bank or brokerage firm
* Investment company manager or advisor
Director/Officer of profiled company

❽ SUB-ENTRIES: Significant and identifiable sub-entities whose holdings are included in the total for the complex head. A single indentation indicates that the complex head owns at least 40% of the sub-entry's voting stock. Family members are also given a single indentation when listed under a family complex. A double indentation indicates that the complex head controls the sub-entry through a management relationship such as an investment advisory agreement or a trust agreement between a commercial bank and employee benefit plan.

Guide to General Company Information

Financial information was obtained from documents filed by the corporation with the SEC. These figures may vary from the data presented in the CDE Operator Charts, which was obtained from the transportation regulatory agencies, due to the different accounting principles used by these agencies. Unless otherwise indicated, the data is for year's end 1974. All dollar amounts are in thousands, except in the Comments. A dash "–" indicates that the item did not apply to that company. All other symbols and abbreviations can be found at the front of the Directory.

Fortune Rank: ranking assigned by Fortune on the basis of sales or asset figures for 1974. Unless otherwise indicated, the CDE used Fortune's list of the top 1,000 industrial firms. Non-industrial companies are ranked according to the Fortune listings for Transportation, Utilities or Diversified/Financial firms. In the few instances where sizeable companies were not ranked by Fortune, the CDE assigned these companies a hypothetical Fortune ranking to permit intercompany comparisons. For instance, UNITED PARCEL SERVICE OF AMERICA INC does not appear in Fortune's 1974 list but was ranked by the CDE as 13 T NRF (Transportation, Not Ranked by Fortune).

Total Debt: short-term debt, that portion of long-term debt due within one year, and all long-term debt due after one year.

Debt/Asset Ratio: total debt divided by total assets–one indicator of the relative dependence of the company on debt funding.

Lease Commitments: the total amount due on outstanding leases. While leases are not currently included in a company's balance sheet, they represent important debt obligations.

Income: the income figure which was used by the company in its business line breakdown statement. The type of income–pretax, net, operating, etc.–is noted in each case.

Foreign Operating Revenue and Income: figures reported by the company to the SEC if they contribute 10% or more of its total sales or income.

Income Tax Rate: the income taxes paid to U.S. federal and state authorities divided by the company's pretax income. This figure affords a comparison with the 48% statutory corporate income tax rate. Percentages in parenthesis indicate a tax credit. Income taxes paid to foreign governments are not included.

Regulation: federal regulatory agencies with which the company files an annual report.

Principal Underwriter(s): the lead underwriter(s) for the most recent offering of the company's securities (stock or debt). Stock issues are given preference over debt issues regardless of the date of the offering. Issues prior to 1965 are excluded and the year of the offering is indicated if it was made before 1974.

Legal Counsel(s): a select list of the company's outside legal counsels and the fees paid in 1974. For companies filing reports with the CAB and FPC, this list includes the largest counsels, ranked by size of their fees. For companies filing reports only with the SEC or the ICC, this list may omit certain major counsels for lack of full disclosure regulations by these agencies. The general counsel was identified where possible. Occasionally a counsel is identified only for years other than 1974.

Transportation Subsidiaries: all CDE Sample Transportation Operators which are company subsidiaries. Their transport mode is indicated and it is noted whether their balance sheet and income statements have been consolidated in the parent's figures.

Business Lines: a breakdown of the company's operating revenues and income by primary areas of activity (percentages in parenthesis indicate a negative figure). These categories are not fully comparable between companies as detailed and uniform reporting is not required by the SEC. See Operating Revenue and Income items for the base figures used in the breakdown.

Stock Structure: all classes of voting stock, and for each class, the number of shares outstanding, the votes per share, the total number of votes, and the number of record holders. The combined total of votes is provided where two or more classes are listed.

Comments: these items, listed under several subheadings, summarize other important facts about the structure and operations of the company as well as significant recent events.

Corporate Structure: name changes, mergers, large acquisitions, bankruptcies, defaults, nationalizations of important foreign subsidiaries, descriptive operating data, and market shares when available.

Corporate Control: significant stockholdings in the company which do not conform to the stockholder profile format.

Changes in Corporate Control: significant changes since the beginning of 1975 in holdings listed in the stockholder profile.

Capital Structure: changes in the capital stock outstanding–such as a stock split–since the date listed under Stock Structure.

Major Transactions: large contracts with government agencies and relationships with suppliers and buyers.

Labor: recent important strikes and major legal cases involving employment discrimination.

Legal Proceedings: important legal cases and regulatory proceedings affecting the company, except those involving employment discrimination and environmental pollution, which appear under the separate headings Labor and Environment.

Environment: major legal proceedings involving environmental pollution by the company.

Payments Disclosure: questionable domestic and foreign payments, including political contributions, which have been disclosed by the company to the SEC.

all stockholders with any voting power. Holders with no identifiable voting power are then ranked according to their total managed holdings. Finally each profile concludes with a ranking of all holders for which no management powers are identified.

GENERAL COMPANY INFORMATION

Financial and other statistical data for each company is presented for year's end 1974 to provide the reader with some indication of the firm's size, financial structure, degree of diversification, and to offer reference points for intercompany comparisons. The items "Legal Counsels" and "Principal Underwriters" document two important outside institutional relations maintained by most companies. The "Comments" update the profile by by summarizing important recent events affecting the corporation.

Corporate Structure: Company's shipping subsidiaries accounted in 1974 for 90% of the cargo shipped between the U.S. West Coast and Hawaii and 50% of the cargo between the West Coast and Guam. Its major containership competitor in both trades is United States Lines (ST), a subsidiary of WALTER KIDDE & CO. In April 1974 Company acquired the operations of SEATRAIN LINES INC between the U.S. West Coast and Hawaii and Guam. In 1974 Company also acquired Rogers Brothers Co, a major U.S. potato and vegetable processor. In 1975 Company acquired an 80% interest in a new venture, Alexander & Baldwin Agribusiness Corp, which specializes in developing and managing large-scale agricultural projects throughout the world and identifying potential agricultural investments for Company.

Labor: In 1971 and early 1972 Company's shipping subsidiaries were struck by the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union (ILWU) for 135 days. In late 1972 they were struck for 45 days by one of Company's offshore unions. In 1975 Company's sugar operations were interrupted by a 45-day industry-wide strike by sugar growing and manufacturing workers who are members of the ILWU.

Company is composed of many motor carriers of household goods in the U.S. and Canada. Each operator serves as an agent of ALLIED and owns one share of Class A voting stock. The voting power of any group of commonly-owned operators cannot exceed 1.1% of the total outstanding vote. This in effect limits the number of votes per group to 5 regardless of the number of shares owned. Nine different groups of operators hold 4 voting shares apiece.

Corporate Structure: In a major diversification move in 1976 Company acquired the oil and gas properties and related real estate interests of Howard Corp, a small oil affiliate of Republic of Texas Corp. Howard had 1975 earnings of $6.5 million and oil and gas reserves valued at $100 million. In December Company announced plans to purchase 2 Americana hotels from the Loews Corp for over $10 million. The hotels, located in Puerto Rico and Florida, had been operated by Company under long-term leases since 1972. See also PAN AMERICAN WORLD AIRWAYS INC.

Major Transactions: In 1974 Company and PAN AMERICAN WORLD AIRWAYS INC agreed to exchange Company's South Pacific routes for PAN AM's routes between the Northeastern United States and points in the Caribbean. Under a contract expiring in 1977 Company buys half its fuel from TEXACO INC.

Labor: Between November 1973 and February 1974 Company laid off 3,000 employees in a reduction of operations attributed to fuel shortages.

Questionable Payments: In August 1973 Company disclosed to the Special Watergate Prosecutor that since 1964 it had made at least $275,000 in domestic political contributions from a slush fund, including a $55,000 illegal contribution to the Nixon re-election campaign. In October 1973 Company pleaded guilty to a misdemeanor charge for a violation of federal law and paid a $5,000 fine. In March 1974 the CAB filed a complaint against Company for violations of CAB accounting and reporting requirements related to the political contributions. In a settlement of the complaint Company and certain of its officers admitted to the violations, paid a $150,000 fine, and consented to an order which prohibited such violations in the future. In a January 1975 settlement of a shareholder suit, the officers responsible for the illegal contributions agreed to pay back $125,000 to Company and have been permanently enjoined from making such political contributions in the future. In 1977 Company disclosed an additional $62,000 in questionable payments between 1971 and 1974, including up to $40,000 in $100 to $1,000 illegal political contributions, mostly to members of Congress, and approximately $20,000 in free transportation for Mexican government officials and their families. Company reported that one of its subsidiaries had received $44,000 in discounts, advertising and promotional allowances from beer, wine and liquor suppliers.

Comments

Corporate Structure: Since 1972 Company has been in default of interest payments on a series of debentures and notes held by a group of 21 banks, and on a Eurocurrency bank loan. To avoid seeking protection under the Federal Bankruptcy Act, Company implemented in December 1975 a Revised Plan of Recapitalization and Refinancing acceptable to its security holders. As a result of the new agreements with its creditors, effectively all Company assets have been pledged as security for the bank loans.

Changes in Corporate Control: The banks listed in the Stock Profile held Company stock as collateral for loans issued to companies controlled by the Isbrandtsen Family interests. When companies controlled by this group filed for bankruptcy in January 1975, the banks acquired the power to vote these shares, which are still formally owned by the Isbrandtsen interests.

Major Transactions: In 1974 Company's maritime transportation subsidiary derived 14% of its freight revenues from military contracts.

Legal Proceedings: Company has brought a suit against RJ REYNOLDS INDUSTRIES INC to force it to divest itself of McLean Industries, the intermediary parent of Sea Land Service Inc (ST).

Payments Disclosure: Company has initiated a court action against Mr. Jacob Isbrandtsen, former President and Chief Executive Officer of Company, and others, charging them with misappropriation of Company funds, some of which are claimed to have been used to make improper payments to labor and government officials, illegal political campaign contributions and illegal rebates to shippers.

Comments

Corporate Structure: In February 1975 Company reincorporated in the State of Michigan. In April 1976 Company changed its name to American Natural Resources Co. Company owns Michigan Consolidated Gas Co, the largest gas distributor in Michigan, and until June 1975 also owned Wisconsin Gas Co, the largest distributor in Wisconsin, which was sold to Company stockholders. In 1975 Company acquired 3.8 billion tons of coal reserves in North Dakota where it began developing a coal gasification project. In November 1976 it acquired Associated Freightways Inc, the newly formed parent company of ASSOCIATED TRUCK LINES INC.

Capital Structure: In March 1975 Company publicly sold 2 million new shares of common stock.

Joint Ventures: Through Michigan Wisconsin Pipe Line Co (ST) Company has a 20% interest in the High Island Offshore System (see TEXAS GAS TRANSMISSION CORP). Company is a participant in the Alaskan Arctic Gas Pipeline Co and the Northern Border Pipeline Co (see NORTHERN NATURAL GAS CO).

Major Transactions: TEXAS GAS TRANSMISSION CORP is a major supplier to Michigan Wisconsin Pipe Line Co (ST), which in turn sells approximately two-thirds of its natural gas to Michigan Consolidated Gas Co, a Company subsidiary, and Wisconsin Gas Co, a former Company subsidiary. Michigan Consolidated Gas Co purchases approximately 79% of its gas from Michigan Wisconsin Pipe Line Co, 7.5% from PANHANDLE EASTERN PIPELINE CO and 4.4% from Great Lakes Gas Transmission Co (ST). The latter also has a long-term supply agreement with Natural Gas Pipeline Co of America (ST). Pending Canadian Government approval Company has entered into an agreement with Imperial Oil Ltd (controlled by EXXON CORP) which gives it the right to purchase one-quarter of the first 16 trillion cubic feet of natural gas produced by Imperial in the Mackenzie River Delta region of northern Canada.

Comments

Corporate Structure: In April 1976 Company acquired a 27% interest in Anaconda Co and in July announced plans to seek 100% ownership despite FTC opposition on antitrust grounds. In November Company sought to erase one of FTC's complaints by selling for $50 million its entire uranium holding to UNITED STATES STEEL CORP. In August 1976 Company sold its Canadian production operations to an affiliate of the Canadian Government for $340 million. In November it acquired a 90% interest in the publisher of the London Observer, a weekly newspaper. Company's transportation operations include a fleet of 22 ocean-going oil tankers with a total deadweight tonnage of 1,400,000. Company owns 18 of these tankers (of which 3 are registered under foreign flag) and charters 4. Company also uses voyage charters and operates smaller vessels on the Great Lakes, inland waterways and along U.S. coasts.

Capital Structure: In June 1976 Company effected a 2-for-1 split of its common stock.

Joint Ventures: Through Arco Pipeline Co (ST) Company has a 21% interest in Alyeska Pipeline Service Co which is building and will operate the 798-mile trans-Alaska pipeline. Other participants in this joint venture are pipeline companies owned by Standard Oil Co (Ohio) (33.34%), British Petroleum Co Ltd (15.84%), EXXON CORP (20%), MOBIL OIL CORP (5%), Union Oil Co of California (1.66%), PHILLIPS PETROLEUM CO (1.66%) and the Amerada Hess Corp (1.5%). In June 1976 Company announced a $1 billion petrochemical joint venture with El Du Pont de Nemours & Co.

Major Transactions: In 1975 Company was the 73rd largest defense contractor with almost $73 million in revenues from military contracts.

Labor: In August 1976, 10 Company employees were contaminated with radioactivity when atomic waste exploded in Company's radioactive waste recovery operations in Richland, WA.

Payments Disclosure: In July 1976 Company disclosed questionable payments totalling $270,000 since January 1, 1969. Company also made $50,000 in "legal" foreign political payments.

Comments

Corporate Structure: In 1974 and 1975 international flights respectively contributed 24.4% and 23.2% of Company's airline operating revenues and 37.7% and 3% of airline net income. Company also has foreign hotel and restaurant operations.

Major Transactions: See WALTER KIDDE & CO.

Labor: In March 1975 Braniff Airways Inc (ST) was sued by the Air Line Pilots Association for alleged sex discrimination in its employment practices. In September 1976 the airline tentatively agreed to pay $1.5 million to minority employees in a proposed consent decree to settle a 3-year-old employment discrimination suit. This suit was brought against Braniff by the Teamsters, the International Association of Machinists and the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

Legal Proceedings: In February 1975 Company and Texas International Airlines were indicted by a federal grand jury for violating the Sherman Antitrust Act.

Payments Disclosure: In April 1976 Braniff Airways Inc (ST) agreed to pay a $300,000 civil penalty in settlement of a CAB charge that it had made unrecorded sales of tickets to generate a slush fund. This fund was used to make more than $1 million in illegal domestic political campaign contributions and payoffs to Latin American travel agents. Company officials involved also consented to an injunction against such practices in the future. The SEC is pursuing an investigation of the matter and an IRS investigation recommended that Company be indicted for filing false income tax returns. In November 1976 Company admitted to a $31,000 payoff to a Latin American official to stave off a government take-over of its operations.

Corporate Structure: Company owns BN Transport Inc, a Class I trucking subsidiary with 1974 revenues of $20.9 million, and Burlington Northern Air Freight, the 17th largest U.S. freight forwarder. Company is competing with a joint proposal by SOO LINE RR CO, Chicago Milwaukee St Paul & Pacific RR Co (ST) and CHICAGO & NORTH WESTERN TRANSPORTATION CO to acquire the 255-mile Green Bay & Western RR Co. See also CHICAGO MILWAUKEE CORP.

Joint Ventures: In 1976 Company formed a joint venture with a subsidiary of CHICAGO MILWAUKEE CORP to build a 1,500 mile crude oil pipeline. Company and CHICAGO & NORTH WESTERN TRANSPORTATION CO's joint plans to build a rail line to open up Powder River Basin coal reserves have been stalled before the ICC by a protest from the Sierra Club and a competing proposal to build a coal slurry pipeline. See also TEXAS GAS TRANSMISSION CORP.

Major Transactions: Company has an agreement with Westmoreland Resources, a major coal producer, to ship coal from Westmoreland's Montana mine. See also COASTAL STATES GAS CORP.

Legal Proceedings: Since 1974 the SEC has been investigating Company for possible violations of security laws by intentionally deferring required maintenance of its track and roadbed in order to increase earnings.

Corporate Structure: Company owns mineral rights on approximately 725,000 acres of coal lands, two thirds of which are leased to mining companies. In early 1976 Company expressed an interest in acquiring substantial trackage from the bankrupt Erie Lackawana Ry Co (ST), Penn Central Transportation Co (ST) and READING CO. The acquisitions did not materialize as Company and unions could not agree on contract terms and work rules for the transferred workers.

Comments

Corporate Structure: In July 1976 Chicago Milwaukee St Paul RR Co (ST) filed a petition with the ICC to be merged into BURLINGTON NORTHERN INC. CHIGAGO ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC RR CO requested ICC permission to acquire one-third of Company's railroad trackage should this merger be completed.

Corporate Control: In accordance with Company's 4th Article of Incorporation the preferred stockholder voted separately as a class to elect 2 directors at Company's annual meeting May 13, 1975. The 4th Article provides for such an election in the event that dividends on preferred sotck are not paid, declared or set aside for payment on each of the preceding 3 semi-annual dividend payment dates.

Joint Ventures: See BURLINGTON NORTHERN INC.

Legal Proceedings: In July 1976 the SEC charged Company with violating numerous securities laws, including failure to disclose that Company's railroad subsidiary was being kept afloat with cash infusions generated through timber sales by another subsidiary. Company was also charged with making illegal political contributions through Company officials. Company and several of its officers and directors executed consent decrees barring them from future violations of the reporting and antifraud provisions of federal securities laws.

Corporate Structure: In March 1970 a group of employees of the Chicago and Northwestern Railway Co (C&NW) organized the North Western Employees Transportation Corp (NETCO) to purchase the railroad properties and related motor carrier rights of C&NW. The latter was controlled by Northwest Industries, a holding company, which stated that the railroad should be financially self-sufficient and could expect no help from its parent. The purchase by NETCO was approved by the ICC in 1972, and 14,000 employees were offered the opportunity to purchase NETCO stock on a graduated scale in relation to annual salaries. During its first 10 years NETCO will be controlled by 3 trustees (see "Control"), whose trusteeship is subject to ICC review and approval. The ICC also imposed conditions to protect minority shareholders and to restrict NETCO in acquiring noncarrier properties without ICC approval. Following the purchase, NETCO changed its name to CHICAGO & NORTH WESTERN TRANSPORTATION CO. See BURLINGTON NORTHERN INC and CHICAGO ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC RR CO.

Capital Structure: Holders of Class T Common stock (3 trustees) have the sole right to vote on election of directors and on all matters submitted to the stockholders. However, holders of Class A Common (employees) and Class T Common each vote as a class on any amendment to the Certificate of Incorporation affecting the number, par value, power or special rights of Class A Common, and on mergers and the sale or lease of Company assets.

Joint Ventures: See BURLINGTON NORTHERN INC.

Major Transactions: In December 1976 Company granted EXXON CORP exploration rights and an option on a mining lease on certain Company lands in Wisconsin.

Corporate Structure: In March 1975 Company filed for protection under Section 77 of the Federal Bankruptcy Act. Subsequently UNION PACIFIC CORP terminated its merger agreement with Company. This merger offer, and a competing offer by CHICAGO & NORTH WESTERN TRANSPORTATION CO, dated back to 1963 (see "Corporate Control"). UNION PACIFIC's merger agreement had been conditionally approved by the ICC in December 1974. Following Company's bankruptcy, Henry Crown, a major Company stock and bond holder, First National Bank of Chicago and Continental Illinois National Bank and Trust Co unsuccessfully tried to have Company liquidated. See also CHICAGO MILWAUKEE CORP, MISSISSIPPI RIVER CORP, SOUTHERN PACIFIC CORP and RIO GRANDE INDUSTRIES INC.

Changes in Corporate Control: During bankruptcy proceedings stockholders lose their power to elect directors. The court appointed W.M. Gibbons as the Trustee. In the stock profile below the First National Bank of Chicago and the Northern Trust Co served as the exchange agents for CHICAGO & NORTH WESTERN TRANSPORTATION CO and UNION PACIFIC CORP respectively in their rival attempts to take over Company. According to Business Week (4-4-77), the Norris Family Interests own 12% of Company's stock.

Corporate Structure: Company subsidiary, American Transit Corp, is primarily engaged in motor bus transportation management and operation. It provides municipal bus service in 15 cities located in 11 states, and also operates sightseeing, suburban, intercity, airport and school bus systems. Company's inland waterways barge operations are conducted through Valley Line Co. In 1975 Company wrote off as a loss a gold mine development in Angola, Africa. While Company has increased its foreign operations in recent years, they contributed less than 10% of sales and operating revenues in 1975.

Major Transactions: Company is engaged in gas turbine engine repair and coating activities, in which its largest customers are the U.S. Air Force and major U.S. and foreign commercial airlines. In 1975 the Federal Renegotiation Board determined that Company made excessive profits of $4.5 million between 1966-68 on its engine repair and coating contracts with the government. Company has appealed the decision. Company's eight ocean-going tankers are all operated under long-term contracts with major oil companies. In December 1975 Company entered into a management contract to begin operating a HOLIDAY INN hotel in Puerto Rico.

Legal Proceedings: In October 1976 Company announced that the SEC was investigating Company's open-market purchases of its own stock.

Cities Service Gas Co (PG-CN)

Comments

Corporate Structure: In 1974 Company initiated an unsuccessful attempt to acquire Peabody Coal Co, a subsidiary of Kennecott Copper Corp. Company's other transportation operations include a fleet of 14 oil tankers with a total deadweight tonnage of 720,000. In 1974 these operations were restructured into a 50-50 joint venture with an unidentified company. Company also owns or leases 2,650 railroad tank cars, hopper cars and gondola cars.

Joint Ventures: In December 1976 the Dept. of Transportation authorized Company and 3 other oil and pipeline companies, including GULF OIL CORP, MOBIL OIL CORP, Shell Oil Co, Dow Chemical Co, and subsidiaries of CONTINENTAL OIL CO, EXXON CORP, PHILLIPS PETROLEUM CO and Crown Central Petroleum Corp, to jointly construct and operate an $865 million deepwater tanker unloading facility, Seadock Inc, off the coast of Texas. Beginning in 1973 Company joined with NORTHERN NATURAL GAS CO to develop plans for 4 coal gassification plants in Wyoming and Montana. Companies have an option to acquire 1 billion tons of coal from Peabody Coal Co, sufficient for 30 years of operations. In February 1975 Company reduced its interest in the Syncrude Project from 30 to 22%. Syncrude is a $2 billion joint venture project due for completion in 1979 which is designed to recover synthetic crude oil from the Athabasca Tar Sands in Alberta, Canada.

Major Transactions: Cities Service Gas Co (ST) has 2 long-term purchase contracts with Transwestern Pipeline Co (ST) for 1.3 trillion cubic feet of gas, and one long-term contract with ARKANSAS LOUISIANA GAS CO for 0.5 trillion cubic feet of gas.

Legal Proceedings: Company is a co-defendant in antitrust actions brought by the States of Kansas and Connecticut.

Environment: Company is the subject of 2 judicial proceedings and 16 notices charging it with air and water pollution.

Payments Disclosure: Company has disclosed that it made over $1 million in questionable foreign payments between 1971-75.

Colorado Interstate Corp (PG-CN)

Comments

Corporate Structure: On January 1, 1976, Colorado Interstate Corp (ST) changed its name to Colorado Interstate Cas Co. Company also owns a 70,000 ton oil tanker and has on order 2 oil tankers aggregating more than 600,000 deadweight tons (see MARITIME FRUIT CARRIERS CO LTD). Company has a 16% interest in General Signal Corp.

Major Transactions: In 1975, 18 companies accounted for 68% of Company's gas purchases (see NORTHWEST ENERGY CO) and 16 companies accounted for 83% of its operating revenues from gas sales, including Public Service Co of Colorado, which alone accounted for 58% (see also PEOPLES GAS CO and LONE STAR GAS CO). Company has a 4-year agreement with BURLINGTON NORTHERN INC which gives Company and its partner, a U.S. subsidiary of the French company Societe Nationale des Petroles d'Aquitaine, oil and gas exploration rights on the railroad's land in 6 states. In 1975 Company was the 87th largest defense contractor with over $49 million in revenues from military contracts.

Legal Proceedings: In July 1976 Company reached a tentative settlement on a 3-year rate dispute with several major customers of its Lo-Vaca Gathering Co subsidiary involving claims of more than $1.4 billion. The centerpiece of the proposed settlement calls for the spin-off of Lo-Vaca to Company's shareholders. Lo-Vaca supplies gas to 400 large customers in Texas, including the cities of San Antonio and Austin.

Payments Disclosure: Company is currently investigating the possibility that it made questionable foreign payments.

Comments

Corporate Structure: At the end of 1975 Company had 13.7 billion tons of coal reserves. Company's transportation operations include a fleet of 20 ocean going oil tankers (8 owned and 12 chartered) with a total deadweight tonnage of 1,524,000. In January 1976 the Venezuelan government nationalized Company's operations in that country.

Joint Ventures: Company is a member of Seadock Inc (see CITIES SERVICE CO). Company heads a consortium of 9 companies which was chosen in June 1976 by the Energy Research and Development Administration to build a coal gassification demonstration plant in Ohio.

Major Transactions: In 1975 Company was the 92nd largest defense contractor with over $47 million in revenues from military contracts.

Labor: In 1975 strikes lasting from 1 to 4 months occurred at 6 U.S. refineries until new contracts were signed with the Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers Union.

Legal Proceedings: Company is a defendant with other oil companies in antitrust class action suits brought by the states of Florida, Connecticut, Kansas and California, and in a civil antitrust action brought by the U.S. Department of Justice. In June 1976 a federal grand jury charged Company and 6 other oil firms with gasoline price-fixing in 6 Mid-Atlantic states.

Payments Disclosure: In December 1976 Company disclosed questionable foreign and domestic political payments totalling $233,000 since 1971. In addition to these payments Company made "gifts" and "gratuities" to customers and government officials totalling yearly up to $31,000 since 1973. It stated that such payments "may be made in the future in accordance with local custom and practice where they are deemed to be in the best interest of the company." It also fired 2 vice-chairmen connected with the questionable payments.

Environment: Company is the subject of several administrative and judicial proceedings charging it with environmental pollution. Company has joined other oil companies and the American Petroleum Institute in suing the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) to challenge EPA's regulations.

Comments

Capital Structure: In January 1976 Company effected a 2-for-1 split of its common stock and issued $11 million in new equity.

New Ventures: Company is working on a design for a floating nuclear power station.

Joint Ventures: In 1976 Company joined in a 50-50 joint venture with a subsidiary of UNION PACIFIC CORP to develop and mine low sulphur coal in Wyoming. Company has been chosen by the Federal Energy Research and Development Administration to play a major role in the construction of a $216 million coal gassification demonstration plant.

Major Transactions: Company is currently building 120 barges of 1,500 tons each and 10 towboats for American Electric Power System, which constitutes Company's largest order for marine equipment.

Labor: In 1974 a strike by Local 61 of the Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers of America shut down Company's Engineering and Works Division for 12 weeks. A new 3-year contract was signed in November.

Legal Proceedings: In February 1975 Company and 4 co-venturers filed a $205 million suit against New York City for non-payment of work on the $225 million Water Tunnel Project. New York, however, has declared the contractors in default for suspending construction on the tunnel and is seeking to force the Dravo consortium to honor the contract.

Comments

Corporate Structure: Company's two luxury hotels in Puerto Rico, acquired from the Rockefeller interests in 1971, were put up for sale in October 1975 and were written off as a loss of $16.8 million. When no buyers were found, ownership titles to the properties were conveyed in June 1976 to the 2 insurance companies that had financed them–a unit of Connecticut General Insurance Corp, and Teachers Insurance and Annuity Association of America. In January 1976, faced with default on its debt, Company arranged with 70 lending institutions a deferral of $75 million in debt payments (see also "Labor"). Lazard Freres & Co, an investment bank, is working with Company on a repayment plan. For merger discussions see CONTINENTAL AIR LINES INC and PAN AMERICAN WORLD AIRWAYS INC.

Changes in Corporate Control: In August 1976 Laurence S. Rockefeller agreed to forego over $2 million in undeclared overdue dividends on his 216,736 shares of convertible preferred stock and to exchange the latter for 800,000 shares of Company's common stock. The exchange, to begin in 1977, will increase the number of Company's total outstanding stock.

Major Transactions: See GREYHOUND CORP.

Labor: In 1975 almost all of Company's employees agreed to a wage freeze for 1976. The freeze allowed the company to avoid defaulting on its debt payments, and contributed 30% of its fiscal 1976 9-months profit.

Legal Proceedings: In late 1974 the House Judiciary Committee investigated possible connections between a $200,000 contribution by the Rockefeller family to President Nixon's re-election campaign and the President's reversal of a CAB ruling against Company. The presidential ruling had allowed Company to acquire Caribair, a Puerto Rico-based airline.

Comments

Corporate Structure: Company was the 95th largest Class I motor freight carrier in 1974 but went bankrupt with its affiliate ASSOCIATED TRANSPORT INC in April 1976. After the courts twice denied Company permission to reorganize under Chapter XI of the Federal Bankruptcy Act, its operating rights and those of ASSOCIATED TRANSPORT INC were sold at auction in July 1976. Portions of ASSOCIATED's operating rights were acquired by 19 motor carriers, including ROADWAY EXPRESS INC, ARKANSAS BEST CORP, Ryder Truck Lines Inc (ST), LEE WAY MOTOR FREIGHT INC and WILSON FREIGHT CO.

Legal Proceedings: In 1975 the SEC charged Company and ASSOCIATED TRANSPORT INC, as well as several of their executives, with diverting employee pension funds for use as working capital and with violating anti-fraud provisions of the securities laws. In November 1975 a federal district judge ordered the companies to appoint new executives and a special counsel to investigate the alleged abuse of pension funds, and enjoined them from securities violations in the future.

El Paso Natural Gas Co (PG-CN)

Comments

Corporate Structure: In January 1974 Company was forced by court decree to divest itself of the Northwest Division of its subsidiary El Paso Natural Gas Co (ST). The divested properties were transferred to the Northwest Pipeline Corp (ST).

Capital Structure: In April 1976 Company issued 4,750,000 new shares of common stock.

New Ventures: Company has proposed a pipeline and maritime transportation system to transport natural gas from the Alaskan North Slope to the U.S. West Coast. This proposal is contending for FPC approval with 2 alternative proposals, the Alaskan Arctic Gas Pipeline Co (see NORTHERN NATURAL GAS CO) and the Northwest Pipeline Project (see NORTHWEST ENERGY CO). By law the FPC must submit its recommendations on the applicant and the route by July 1, 1977. The FPC staff has already recommended the Arctic Project. Company has proposed to build a coal gassification plant on a Navajo Indian reservation in northwestern New Mexico.

Joint Ventures: Company is presently engaged in a joint venture with COLUMBIA GAS SYSTEM INC, CONSOLIDATED NATURAL GAS CO and Southern Natural Gas Co (ST) to import Algerian liquified natural gas. Company has a 25-year contract with the Algerian national oil and gas company to purchase 1 billion cubic feet of gas per day starting in the second half of 1977.

Major Transactions: In 1975 Company reached an interim agreement with Standard Oil Co (Ohio) under which part of Company's pipeline system would transport Alaskan crude oil from California to Texas. In November 1976 a Company subsidiary contracted with the State of Alaska to buy 650 billion cubic feet of gas over a 20-year period. This represents 17% of the State's royalty reserves from the Alaskan North Slope. See also PACIFIC GAS & ELECTRIC CO, OGDEN CORP, TENNECO INC and TRANSCO COS INC.

Comments

Corporate Structure: In February 1976 Company and its 3 co-venturers agreed to sell their aggregate 40% interest in Aramco to the Saudi Arabian government. Aramco accounts for the bulk of Saudi Arabia's oil output. Company owns the second largest coal reserves in the United States. Company's other transportation operations include the largest private shipping fleet in the United States. Company's ocean-going oil tankers total a deadweight tonnage of 26,420,000. It has approximately 184 tankers operating under foreign flags.

Capital Structure: In May 1976 Company effected a 2-for-1 split of its common stock.

Joint Ventures: Exxon Pipeline Co (ST) is a participant in Alyeska Pipeline Service Co (see ATLANTIC RICHFIELD CO) and Seadock Inc (see CITIES SERVICE CO). See also COLUMBIA GAS SYSTEM INC and EQUITABLE GAS CO.

Major Transactions: In 1975 Company was the 19th largest defense contractor with over $330 million in revenues from military contracts. See AMERICAN NATURAL GAS CO, INTERPROVINCIAL PIPE LINE LTD, OGDEN CORP and CHICAGO & NORTH WESTERN TRANSPORTATION CO.

Legal Proceedings: In 1976 the Federal Energy Administration accused Company of illegally overcharging the military $29 million.

Payments Disclosure: In 1975 Company admitted making $46 million in political contributions and unauthorized payments in Italy between 1963-71 and additional payments in three other countries between 1963-75. The SEC is pursuing its investigation of these payments and the involvement of Company's management.

FRONTIER AIRLINES INC (AL-UN)

Comments

Corporate Structure: RKO General Inc, the wholly owned subsidiary through which Company owns FRONTIER AIRLINES INC, is consolidated in Company's financial statements on an equity basis only (see also "Payments Disclosure").

Major Transactions: In November 1975 Company's subsidiary, Chemical Construction Corp, was replaced by Bechtel International Inc as the contractor of a $327 million liquified natural gas plant for the Algerian state-owned oil and gas company, Sonatrach. Company had allegedly defaulted on the contract. This plant is part of an overall plan to bring gas in special tankers to the United States (see EL PASO CO and TENNECO INC). In 1975 Company was the 37th largest defense contractor, with almost $169 million in revenues from military contracts.

Legal Proceedings: See FRONTIER AIRLINES INC.

Payments Disclosure: In May 1976 the SEC charged Company with making illegal domestic political contributions and over $1 million in overseas bribes, paying "gratuities" to U.S. government officials, violating U.S. foreign currency laws and maintaining secret slush funds. The SEC charged that foreign bribes were made in Chile, Morocco and other countries. The FTC is investigating possible antitrust violations related to the Moroccan payoffs which allegedly prevented a U.S. competitor from entering the Moroccan tire market. As a consequence of Company's illegal financial activity, a Boston group has petitioned the FCC not to renew Company's TV license in the Boston area, and the Algerian Government has brought a suit against Company charging it with making payoffs to obtain a natural gas construction contract in Algeria (see "Major Transactions"). Due to the challenge to its TV license, Company decided in September 1976 to sell its media subsidiary, RKO General Inc, to its shareholders, subject to FCC and SEC approval.

Corporate Structure: In 1975 Company acquired Vermont Transit Co Inc, a New England intercity bus operator with $5.6 million in 1974 operating revenues, and agreed to acquire 2 smaller intercity bus operators.

Major Transactions: In September 1974 Company concluded an interline agreement with NATIONAL RR PASSENGER CORP which will permit the parties to sell connecting travel tickets through each others' lines. In 1975 Company's Support Services Group was granted a $50 million contract to provide lodging and food services to 5,000 workers along a portion of the Alaska oil pipeline. Company's food services operations are heavily dependent on the automobile industry, and General Motors Corp accounts for over one-third of this group's volume. General Motors is also Company's sole supplier of motor buses. As of 1976 Company's leasing subsidiary, which leases jet aircraft, railroad cars and locomotives, ocean-going vessels and other industrial equipment, received the major part of its revenues from aircraft leased to EASTERN AIR LINES INC and TRANS WORLD AIRLINES INC.

Payments Disclosure: In July 1976 Company disclosed that its meat packing subsidiary, Armour & Co, had made $1.8 million in questionable foreign payments between 1973-76.

Comments

Corporate Structure: In December 1975 the Government of Kuwait nationalized Company's 20% interest in operations in that country, and the Venezuelan Government nationalized all of Company's Venezuelan operations. In September 1976 Ecuador threatened to nationalize Company's assets unless it paid its debts to the government. In retaliation Company withdrew from its joint venture with TEXACO INC and the state-owned oil company in January 1977. This joint venture produces the bulk of Ecuador's oil production. Company's other transportation operations include a fleet of 88 ocean-going tankers (57 owned, of which 34 are under foreign flags, and 31 chartered), with a total deadweight tonnage of 8,183,000. Company also operates 26 smaller vessels on the Great Lakes and inland waterways. Company owns 922 railroad tank cars and leases an additional 2,970.

Joint Ventures: Company is a participant in Seadock Inc (see CITIES SERVICE CO) and in the Alaskan Arctic Gas Pipeline Co (see NORTHERN NATURAL GAS CO). See also ROYAL DUTCH/SHELL GROUP.

Major Transactions: Since 1963 Company has maintained an agreement with HOLIDAY INNS INC to coordinate the location of Holiday Inns and Gulf service stations, cooperate in advertising and use the Gulf Travel Card for Holiday Inn services. In 1975 Company was the 71st largest defense contractor with over $79 million in revenues from military contracts.

Labor: In July 1976 Company agreed to pay $935,000 to 640 minority and female employees at one of its Texas refineries as part of a settlement of discrimination charges brought against Company by the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, the Department of Interior and the Department of Labor.

Legal Proceedings: As of December 1975, 6 antitrust suits were pending against Company and legal proceedings were still developing out of a 1973 FTC complaint against Company and 7 other oil firms which accused them of combining to monopolize crude oil refining. See TEXAS EASTERN TRANSMISSION CORP.

Payments Disclosure: In 1975 Company admitted to making $12.3 million in illegal domestic and foreign political contributions, including $4 million to South Korean political parties between 1966-70, and consented to a court judgement which enjoined it from making similar contributions in the future. In July 1976 Company's former chief Washington lobbyist, Claude Wild, Jr., pleaded guilty to a misdemeanor charge of helping to channel an illegal political contribution from Company to President Richard Nixon's reelection campaign. Approximately 25 Senators as well as dozens of Representatives received contributions from Company, allegedly including Senator Robert Dole, the 1976 Republican Vice-presidential candidate, who was reported to have received in 1973 between $5,000 and $6,000. In September Company tentatively agreed to a settlement of stockholder claims arising from Company's illegal political slush fund. The settlement would require 6 former executives to pay back $4 million to Company in stock, stock options and cash. In July a federal grand jury brought the first in a series of indictments of IRS personnel based on an investigation of Company gratuities paid to them. In November Company disputed a claim by a controversial South Korean businessman, Park Tong Sun, that it had paid him $1 million a month for unspecified business services.

Environment: Company is a defendant in several environmental pollution cases.

Corporate Structure: In August 1975 Company adopted a plan to divest all its manufacturing operations, including food processing. Company is the world's largest hotel-motel chain. Together with its franchisees it operates 1,700 inns in all 50 U.S. states and 45 other countries.

Changes in Corporate Control: In April 1976 Walkem Development Co, a real estate joint venture between Company Chairman Kemmons Wilson and Vice-chairman Wallace E. Johnson, sold 1,130,000 of the Company shares which it held, reducing its holdings in Company from 5.7% to 2.3%.

Major Transactions: Continental Trailways system's buses are manufactured to Company specifications by Overseas Inns SA under a contract which expires in 1979. Overseas, a Luxembourg company, is 18.3% owned by M.E. Moore, former Company director, and his associates. Overseas also operates Holiday Inn franchises in Luxembourg, Belgium and Germany. See GULF OIL CORP.

Labor: Bus drivers of Safeway Trails Inc, a wholly-owned subsidiary of Continental Trailways Inc (ST), have been on strike since 1972, although Company reestablished service on most of the struck routes by 1974. Five of Company's bus operators were struck for 18 days in the second quarter of 1976.

Legal Proceedings: In February 1974 a court decision upheld certain antitrust claims against Company by American Motor Inns Inc in regard to its hotel licensing arrangements. A similar antitrust suit against Company by a licensee went to trial in June 1975.

Chemical Towing Co (WC-CN)
Dixie Carriers Inc (WC-CN)

Comments

Corporate Structure: In 1975 Company announced plans for complete liquidation. In June 1975 it sold two major subsidiaries: Kirby Building Systems Inc and Kirby Petroleum Co. In August 1976 Company issued stock for Kirby Exploration Co and Caribbean Finance Co Inc which will be distributed to Company stockholders. Kirby Exploration Co became the new parent of Dixie Carriers Inc and Chemical Towing Co, Company's two water carriers. Company plans to either sell its remaining subsidiary, Financial Credit Corp, or distribute its stock to Company stockholders. When a Liquidating Trust is established in October 1976 Company stockholders will be asked to surrender their stock and will be entitled to distributions from the Trust.

Major Transactions: In 1974 a subsidiary of STANDARD OIL CO (INDIANA) purchased 31% of Company's oil production, and Allied Chemical Corp and Mountain Fuel Supply Co (the 32nd largest interstate gas pipeline) purchased 16% and 23% respectively of Company's gas production. In 1974 17% of Dixie Carrier Inc's (ST) revenues were derived from a contract with Shell Oil Co.

Privately-owned interests for which no information is available except from published sources.

Corporate Structure: Recently described by Fortune as one of two living billionaires in the United States, Ludwig is one of the major independent shipowners in the world, with approximately 50 ships totalling 7 million tons. Over the last decade and a half, Ludwig at one time or another invested in California land and savings and loan associations, and owned a refinery and an orange plantation in Panama, a Venezuelan cattle ranch, and coal deposits in Australia. In 1976 he sold a half interest in the latter to British Petroleum Co Ltd for $200 million. Ludwig made some profitable sales of other operations and assets over the last decade, including a 15% interest in Union Oil Co, sold in 1965 at a 46% profit; an 11% interest in McLean Industries, sold in 1969 to RJ REYNOLDS INDUSTRIES INC for a 500% profit; and the world's largest salt evaporation plant, sold in 1975 to Mitsubishi Corp for $50 million. One of Ludwig's largest ventures is the development of his 3-million acre tract of land in the Amazon. Ludwig will invest an estimated $1 billion in this venture by 1983. It will include a timber plantation of fast-growing Indian "gmelinas" and Caribbean pine, a $264 million pulp plant, a rice plantation, a cattle ranch, a clay deposit and a complete town. In March 1976 Ludwig received permission from the British government to build a $360 million oil refinery and marine terminal in Scotland.

Corporate Structure: In 1975 Company acquired 14,000 acres of undeveloped Kentucky coal land from a unit of NORFOLK & WESTERN RY CO.

Major Transactions: The Davis Family Interests, the largest identified voting stockholder of Company, began a suit against Company in 1975 over the terms of the expiration of a coal brokerage contract which Company had with the family firm, Davis Coals. Company decided to terminate the contract claiming that the brokerage commissions paid to Mr. Davis (estimated at $2.75 million in 1975) had become excessive. Mr. Davis has resigned from Company's board of directors.

Corporate Structure: In October 1976 Company acquired a newly-built $400 million refinery owned by Energy Corp of Louisiana, a joint venture between Northeast Petroleum Industries Inc and Ingram Corp. With this acquisition Company grew from the 16th largest U.S. oil refiner to the 10th.

Joint Ventures: In December 1976 the Department of Transportation authorized Company and 5 other oil companies including Shell Oil Co, TEXACO INC, Ashland Oil Inc, Murphy Oil Corp, and Union Oil Co of California to jointly construct and operate a $738-million deepwater tanker unloading facility, known as Loop Inc, off the coast of Louisiana.

Legal Proceedings: Company is a co-defendant in two antitrust suits brought by the States of Florida and Connecticut against 17 and 23 oil companies respectively.

Payments Disclosure: In October 1976 Company disclosed that a recently-acquired subsidiary, Pan Ocean Oil Corp, made "improper payments" totalling $68,500 over a 5-year period before its acquisition by Company. An additional $600,000 in "borderline" payments were made to foreign government officials. Company has stated that its own policy is to "continue to make 'facilitating' payments to government officials in foreign countries where they are considered customary."

Corporate Structure: In February 1976 Company defaulted on approximately $23.5 million of its debt, provoking a struggle for control of Company and the liquidation of most of its fleet. Contending for control were Mila Brener and Yaacov Meridor, Company's co-managing directors and largest stockholders, and Struve Hensel, a partner in the New York law firm of Coudert Brothers and the unofficial representative of a major company creditor, Bankers Trust Co of New York. Following the default, Hensel was elected top executive, replacing Brener and Meridor, whose stock was placed in a trust under Hensel's control. Brener and Meridor regained control of Company in June. Company has since charged Bankers Trust and others with attempting to liquidate it to further their own interests. Company's one-time fleet of 40 refrigerated ships, consisting of 18 British, 14 German and 8 Israeli-flag reefers, and 10 tankers has been reduced to a few operating vessels. Only one of the German ships was owned by Company; the others were operated under long-term charters. Most of Company's other ships have been either sold or seized by creditors. Company also sold to COASTAL STATES GAS CORP its 50% interest in 2 supertankers under construction, cancelled an LNG tanker construction contract with a French shipyard, and terminated a contract with Bethlehem Steel Corp for the construction of 2 offshore drilling rigs. Company's financial difficulties were particularly threatening to the British shipbuilding industry where one third of the shipyard labor force is dependent on contracts from Company. The default prompted the sale of all of Company's British-flag reefers, including 3 to Salen Reefer Services AB, a subsidiary of the Swedish shipping group Rederi AB Salenia; 10 to Cunard Steamship Co, a subsidiary of Trafalgar House Investments Ltd; and 2 to Willy Bruns Co of Hamburg. Cunard financed its acquisition with a loan from Barclays Bank, and from Chemical Bank and First National Bank of Boston, 2 leading Company creditors. Chunard intends to negotiate a charter of the ships to the Salen group, which had operated under charter all of Company's reefers until July 1976. The bulk of these sales followed the September breakdown of an a agreement between Company and SEA CONTAINERS INC to form a joint-venture to take over 23 British and Israeli-flag ships. SEA CONTAINERS withdrew from the venture to avoid antagonizing its Arab customers and jeopardizing relations with the Salen group, which also acts as a SEA CONTAINERS agent. In July the Israeli government sought to save Company's Israeli-flag ships by passing legislation permitting early repayment of a 1973 Company loan to the Israeli government. An Israeli court later barred Bankers Trust Co from selling the remaining 5 Israeli-flag ships, charging Bankers Trust with putting pressure on Company due to the bank's ties to Arab financial interests. In November Company filed a $300 million suit against Bankers Trust, Manufacturers and Traders Trust Co, the Salen group, UNITED BRANDS CO (a major Salen customer) and others, charging conspiracy to destroy Company to further their own interests. The charges have been denied by the defendants.

Major Transactions: Until July 1976 all of Company's reefers were operated under a long-term charter by Salen Reefer Services AB, a subsidiary of the Swedish shipping group Rederi AB Salenia. Under this arrangement Salen operated a total of 86 reefers in 1974, which according to Company estimates equalled about half the capacity of the free world's independent reefer fleet. Salen is also one of the largest stockholders in UNITED BRANDS CO and transports all of the bananas marketed by the latter in Europe.

Comments

Corporate Structure: In June 1976 Company changed its name to Missouri Pacific Corp. In 1974-75 ALLEGHANY CORP sold to Company its complete holdings in MISSOURI PACIFIC RR CO. In May 1976 Company made a tender offer for all the stock of its 3 railroad subsidiaries. In addition, the ICC rejected the petition of CHICAGO ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC RR CO that it be included in the 1975-76 merger of Texas & Pacific Ry Co (ST) and Chicago & Eastern Illinois RR Co into MISSOURI PACIFIC RR CO. In April 1976 Company and SOUTHERN RY CO announced a joint study to determine the feasibility and advisability of combining their operations under common corporate ownership and control. Such an agreement would have formed the second longest railroad system in the United States. Discussions were broken off in September 1976.

Major Transactions: Mississippi River Transmission Corp (ST) purchases approximately 64% of its gas from UNITED GAS PIPELINE CO, 12% from Trunkline Gas Co (ST) and 8% from Natural Gas Pipeline Co of America (ST). Under an agreement which extends to 1988 it sells 58% of its gas to Laclede Gas Co, a St. Louis-based utility.

Legal Proceedings: Company has been a staunch opponent of current proposals and legislation to expand barge traffic on the Mississippi and Illinois rivers and to construct coal slurry pipelines from the West into the MISSOURI PACIFIC service area.

Corporate Structure: In September 1974 Company acquired a 54% interest in Marcor Inc, the parent holding company of Montgomery Ward & Co and Container Corp of America. Marcor's 1974 operating revenues exceeded $4 billion. In June 1976 Company reorganized as a Delaware-chartered holding company called Mobil Corp into which Marcor was merged. In May 1976 Company announced plans to acquire the Irvine Co which has agricultural and real estate operations in California and Montana. Irvine's assets have been valued at between $300 and $500 million. Company is competing in this acquisition with Cadillac Fairview Corp, a Toronto-based real estate developer controlled by the Bronfman interests, and with SMBH&Z Inc, a privately-held Detroit company controlled by Charles Allen, Jr. and A. Alfred Taubman. In January 1976 Company's Venezuelan concessions and facilities were nationalized. In April 1975 Company announced its intention to increase its interest in Aramco, the major Saudi Arabian oil producer, from 10 to 15% over the next 5 years. In February 1976, however, Company and its 3 co-venturers agreed to sell their aggregate 40% interest to the Saudi Arabian government. Company's other transportation operations include a fleet of 132 ocean-going tankers (48 owned, with 39 of these under foreign flags, and 84 chartered) with a total deadweight tonnage of 11,330,000. Company also uses voyage charters.

Joint Ventures: Company is a participant in Seadock Inc (see CITIES SERVICE CO) and has a 5% interest in Alyeska Pipeline Service Co (see ATLANTIC RICHFIELD CO).

Major Transactions: In 1975 Company was the 33rd largest defense contractor with more than $204 million in revenues from military contracts. In June 1976 the United Church of Christ charged Company with selling $20 million in petroleum products annually to Rhodesia in violation of a U.N.-sponsored boycott. Company stated that it was "unable" to verify these charges due to the legal restrictions of South Africa and Rhodesia's official secrets acts.

Legal Proceedings: In order to resolve a dispute over the pricing of jet fuel in Guam, Company agreed under a consent decree to pay $1.9 million in refunds to 3 airlines and a penalty to the Federal Energy Administration.

Payments Disclosure: In June 1976 Company disclosed that Marcor, a Company subsidiary, had made $635,517 in questionable foreign payments between 1971-76. In March 1977 it disclosed additional foreign payments in one country of $196,000 between 1970-75.

Corporate Structure: In December 1974 Company contracted to enlarge 2 of its cargo vessels, increasing their 20-foot container capacity from 199 to 521. Company also had 2 bulk carriers on order from the American Shipbuilding Co aggregating 118,000 gross tons. In July 1975 Company appointed Robert A. Hurwick, formerly associated with the New York law firm of Cravath, Swaine & Moore, as its General Counsel and Secretary.

Changes in Corporate Control: In September 1974 Company purchased a 25.6% block of its then outstanding stock from City Investing Co for $16.6 million. These shares are held in Company's treasury stock.

Capital Structure: In November 1975 Company announced a 2-for-1 stock split.

Joint Ventures: See PANHANDLE EASTERN PIPE LINE CO.

Major Transactions: Together with 2 Brazilian carriers, Company is a party to agreements approved by the U.S. and Brazilian Governments which provide equal access to southbound cargoes generated by the 2 governments. This arrangement includes a revenue sharing agreement. Company also has a 40% share of a conference pooling agreement which reserves to U.S. and Brazilian carriers a large proportion of certain northbound cargoes between Brazilian ports. A revenue pooling agreement with the Argentine state-owned shipping company assures Company access to a substantial portion of U.S.-Argentine waterborne trade. Interlake Steamship Co (ST) transports primarily iron ore on the Great Lakes for 4 iron and steel companies. Company has agreed to purchase and lease 3 oil tankers to a subsidiary of ROYAL DUTCH/SHELL GROUP for 7 year periods. The charter of 2 vessels to the Military Sealift Command terminated in July and September 1974.

Comments

Joint Ventures: In 1971 Company engaged in joint exploratory drilling operations in Pennsylvania and New York with Consolidated Gas Supply Corp (ST), Weaver Oil & Gas Corp, and a subsidiary of STANDARD OIL CO (INDIANA).

Major Transactions: Company purchases over 50% of its gas from Tennessee Gas Pipeline Co (ST) under long-term contracts expiring in 1988. Another 37% is supplied by Columbia Gas Transmission Corp (ST), Consolidated Gas Supply Corp (ST), TEXAS EASTERN TRANSMISSION CORP, Transcontinental Gas Pipeline Corp (ST), Shell Oil Co, and Valley Gas Transmission Co. In 1974 Company began purchasing 5% of its gas from Ashland Oil Co under a 10-year contract.

Labor: In February 1975 over half of Company's employees went out on strike for a month and a half.

Control

Ten of the 13 directors represent the United States Government; nine are appointed by the President (with the advice and consent of the Senate) and the tenth is the Secretary of Transportation who serves ex officio. The other three directors are elected by the four railroads that own all of the Company's outstanding common stock as follows: CHICAGO MILWAUKEE CORP* (6.33%); CANADIAN NATIONAL RY CO* (2.22%); BURLINGTON NORTHERN INC (35.64%); and Penn Central Transportation Co (55.81%). However no single railroad can vote more than one third of the outstanding common shares.

Comments

Corporate Structure: Company was created under the National Rail Passenger Service Act of October 30, 1970 as a quasi-public corporation. It is subsidized through Federal operating grants and can enter into U.S. government guaranteed debt and lease obligations of up to $900 million. Data is not available for 1974, but a breakdown of 1975 operating revenues by business line shows passenger transportation contributing 87%, dining and buffet services 6%, and mail, express and other, 7%. In September 1976 the Department of Transportation authorized Company to purchase the Boston-Washington northeast rail corridor from ConRail.

Major Transactions: See GREYHOUND CORP and OGDEN CORP.

Comments

Corporate Structure: In 1974 American President Lines Ltd (ST) carried an estimated 12-15% of the total outbound and inbound commercial cargo between U.S. Pacific coast ports and Far East ports. In 1976 Company announced plans to sell this maritime transportation subsidiary and concentrate on energy investment and development. In 1974 Company obtained 86% of its net income from its Indonesian oil operations. This portion of Company's income may be cut in half by 1977 if the IRS sustains its May 1976 ruling which disallows the use of foreign taxes paid by Company to the Indonesian Government as credits against U.S. income taxes. In September 1976 Company reached a preliminary agreement to acquire Apexco Inc, an oil & gas producer, for $127 million.

Erie Lackawanna Ry Co (RR-UN)

Comments

Corporate Structure: The transportation of coal, coke and iron ore provides approximately 38% of Company's operating revenues. Company also owns Delaware & Hudson Ry Co, the 38th largest U.S. railroad. In March 1975 Company's President called for the nationalization of part of Penn Central Transportation Co (ST) and other bankrupt Northeastern railroads. Erie Lackawanna Ry Co (ST) has been in reorganization proceedings under Section 77 of the Federal Bankruptcy Act since 1972. During bankruptcy proceedings stockholders lose their power to elect directors and the trustees are appointed by the court. In 1976 Erie Lackawanna was reorganized into ConRail. See also CHESSIE SYSTEM INC and MAPCO INC.

Capital Structure: In September 1976 Company declared a 3-for-1 split of its common stock.

Corporate Structure: Company owns 1,525,565 shares of MOBIL OIL CORP obtained when it sold its Northern Natural Gas Producing Co subsidiary to Mobil.

Capital Structure: In October 1975 Company effected a 2-for-1 split of its common stock in the form of a 100% stock dividend.

Joint Ventures: Company is a participant in a consortium of 15 U.S. and Canadian companies organized as Alaskan Arctic Gas Pipeline Co and Canadian Arctic Gas Pipeline Co. This consortium has proposed to construct a large-diameter natural gas pipeline from the North Slope of Alaska and northern Canada to Canadian and U.S. markets. Company is also a participant with 5 other U.S. gas companies in the complementary project, Northern Border Pipeline Co, which proposes to build and operate a gas pipeline to transport the Alaskan and Canadian Arctic gas from the Canadian border to gas pipeline systems in the Upper Midwest and Eastern United States. This package of projects is contending for FPC approval with 2 alternative proposals presented by EL PASO CO and NORTHWEST ENERGY CO. By law the FPC must submit its final recommendations on the applicant and the route by July 1, 1977. The FPC staff has already indicated its approval of Company's project. Company is also engaged in a joint experimental coal gassification project in Wyoming (see CITIES SERVICE CO).

Major Transactions: Company has separate gas purchase and/or advance payment agreements with EXXON CORP, ATLANTIC RICHFIELD CO, BP Alaska Exploration Inc, Cabot Corp and a division of Allied Chemical Corp for the rights to a part of their future production from leases in the Gulf of Mexico and the Alaskan North Slope.

Corporate Structure: Unlike most international airlines, Company is not a member of the International Air Transport Association which sets international rates.

Labor: Company is the second most strike-prone firm in the industry. Since 1965 its pilots have struck for 98 days, the machinists for 43 days and the airline clerks for 163 days. In 2 class action lawsuits charging Company with discriminatory employment practices, the trial judge ruled that Company had violated the Equal Pay Act of 1963 and the Civil Rights Act of 1964. The liabilities could amount to $26 million.

Legal Proceedings: Company is a co-defendant in 2 separate antitrust suits, one brought by a travel agency charging Company and other airlines and travel agencies with monopolizing trade, and another brought by Alaska Airlines Inc charging Company and WESTERN AIR LINES INC with monopolizing service between Seattle and Anchorage with the purpose of eliminating Alaska Airlines as a competitor.

Comments

Corporate Structure: Company was incorporated in February 1974 and became the parent holding company of Northwest Pipeline Corp (ST) in February 1975. Northwest Pipeline consists of the former Northwest Division of El Paso Natural Gas Co (ST) which was divested under court order in February 1974 after a 10-year legal battle. Of the 10 contenders for control over Northwest Pipeline Corp, the court selected the APCO Group, a joint venture between Apco Oil Corp, Alaska Interstate Co, Gulf Interstate Co and Tipperary Corp. The APCO Group's control became applicable to Company when Northwest Pipeline Corp was restructured as a Company subsidiary in February 1975 (see "Control").

Voting Trust: The Voting Trust, which as of 2-28-75 held the voting rights to 80% of Company's stock, was established on May 1, 1974 under a 5-year agreement between El Paso Natural Gas Co (ST), Northwest Pipeline Corp (ST), John G. McMillian, as Voting Trustee, and the 4 members of the APCO Group. El Paso Natural Gas Co agreed to deposit with the Voting Trust 80% of the shares which it received from the sale of its Northwest Division to Northwest Pipeline Corp in exchange for Participation Certificates. These Certificates, which are entitled to dividends but not to voting rights, were then distributed pro rata to the stockholders of El Paso Natural Gas Co. Each Certificate holder can exchange such Certificates for Company's common stock up until the termination of the Voting Trust Agreement in February 1979, provided the holder can demonstrate that he does not beneficially own any stock of EL PASO CO; the parent holding company of El Paso Natural Gas Co. All shares deposited in the Voting Trust must be voted by Mr. McMillian as directed by Company's board of directors. Mr. McMillian is himself the chairman of Company and of Apco Oil Corp. Company directors are principally representatives of the 4 members of the APCO Group.

Changes in Corporate Control: As of April 1977 the holdings of Company's principal stockholders had changed as follows: Voting Trust (57.1%); Apco Oil Corp (12.2%); Gulf Interstate Co (2.4%) and Tipperary Corp (1.6%). Apco Oil Corp increased its holdings through the acquisition of the shares held by Alaska Interstate Co. This acquisition was part of a settlement of litigation over competing tender offer's for Apco's own stock. In 1975 Alaska Interstate had attempted to gain control over Apco in order to combine itself with Apco and Company. This attempt was opposed through a competing offer by Company, which acquired approximately 48% of Apco's stock with a $40 million loan from Citibank. An additional 8% of Apco's stock is owned by Loeb, Rhoades & Co, its partners and related interests. Loeb, Rhoades & Co also acts as Apco and Company's principal underwriter.

Changes in Capital Structure: In December 1975 Company issued 750,000 new shares of common stock through Loeb, Rhoades & Co.

Joint Ventures: In July 1976 a Company subsidiary, Alcan Pipeline Co, filed an application with the FPC to build a pipeline from Alaska's Prudhoe Bay to the Alaska-Yukon border as part of a proposed system to transport natural gas from Alaska's North Slope through Canada to major U.S. markets. The project resulted from an agreement between Company and 3 Canadian companies, West Coast Transmission Co Ltd, Albertas Gas Trunk Line (Canada) Ltd and Foothill Pipe Lines Ltd, which would transport the gas from northern Canada to the Canadian-U.S. border. This project is contending for FPC approval with two alternative proposals—the Alaskan Arctic Gas Pipeline Co (see NORTHERN NATURAL GAS CO) and a proposal presented by EL PASO CO. By law the FPC must submit its recommendations on the applicant and the route by July 1, 1977. The FPC staff has already indicated its approval of the Alaskan Arctic Project. Company has a 49% interest in Phillips Pacific Chemical Co, a joint venture with PHILLIPS PETROLEUM CO.

Major Transactions: In 1975 Company obtained two-thirds of its gas supply from Western Canada where half its proved reserves are located. In 1975 Company supplied all of the natural gas consumed in the States of Washington, Oregon and Idaho, which accounted for 75% of all its gas sales. The 4 largest of its 21 customers were Northwest Natural Gas Co (20%), Washington Natural Gas Co (18%), Cascade Natural Gas Corp (14%) and a subsidiary of COLORADO INTERSTATE CORP (12%). Company has gas purchase, transportation or exchange agreements with PACIFIC GAS TRANSMISSION CO, STANDARD OIL OF CALIFORNIA and several other companies.

Comments

Corporate Structure: A Company subsidiary, International Products Corp, processes and sells meat products in Paraguay where it owns approximately 1,500,000 acres for cattle ranching. Another Company subsidiary, Ogden Leisure, operates 5 race tracks in 4 states. By November 1976 Company had increased its fleet to 30 ships totalling 1,500,000 deadweight tons, which by its own estimates makes it the 3rd largest U.S. corporate fleet. In December 1976 a Company subsidiary borrowed $100 million from the Prudential Insurance Co of America.

Major Transactions: A Company subsidiary, Avondale Shipyards, the largest employer in Louisiana and the 4th largest shipyard in the United States, has major commercial shipbuilding and refurbishing contracts, one third of which are partially financed by the Commerce Department's Maritime Subsidy Board. Recent contracts include: (1) 3 LNG tankers for subsidiaries of El Paso Natural Gas Co (ST) at a total cost of $309 million, 16.5% of which is being paid by federal subsidies; (2) 6 LASH cargo ships for a subsidiary of FREIGHTERS INC; (3) 5 LASH cargo ships for PRUDENTIAL LINES INC; (4) 6 tankers for Standard Oil Co (Ohio) to transport crude oil between Alaska and west coast ports (2 of which were transferred to EXXON CORP in November 1976); (5) 2 refrigerated cargo vessels for FARRELL LINES INC which are partially funded by a federal subsidy; and (6) 2 auxiliary oil tenders for the U.S. Navy worth $150 million. See also PACIFIC GAS & ELECTRIC CO. Avondale has also built 27 destroyer escorts for the U.S. Navy since 1964. One Company bulk carrier is chartered to the Navy's Sealift Command, constituting approximately 9% of the combined total revenues for the marine subsidiary. In 1975 Company was the 59th largest defense contractor with over $93 million in revenues from military contracts. Three LNG carriers are being built for a unit of Pacific Lighting Corp and will be operated for that company by Ogden Marine under 20-year charters. Japanese and Canadian shipyards are constructing 3 foreign-flag tankers for Company at a cost of approximately $72 million. Company also provides food services to major airlines, with NATIONAL AIRLINES INC as its largest customer. Company's metals division manufactures over 1,000 special-purpose railroad cars a year. A Company subsidiary, Aviation Power Supply, has a contract with NATIONAL RAILROAD PASSENGER CORP to overhaul, repair and maintain their turbine engines.

Labor: In recent years the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, the U.S. Maritime Administration, and representatives of minority groups and women have brought several suits against Company for discriminatory employment, promotion and training practices. A major action involving Avondale Shipyards, accused of discriminating against Blacks, was resolved with a Consent Decree whereby the Company agreed to refrain from discriminating, pay up to $275,000 in back pay and spend substantial amounts for training minorities.

Payments Disclosure: In March 1976 Company admitted to making approximately $2.6 million in illegal foreign payments and domestic political contributions between 1970-75.

Environment: Several state and federal agencies have filed suits against various Company subsidiaries for violating air and water pollution regulations. The subsidiaries either pleaded no contest to the charges and agreed to take corrective measures, or were fined for damages.

Joint Ventures: Company manages the Eveleth Taconite Co, an iron ore producer, as a 15-85 joint venture with Ford Motor Co.

In 1974 Company formed a new joint venture, Eveleth Expansion Co, with 3 steel companies including Armco Steel Corp, a major Company stockholder. This joint venture, coupled with new facilities at Eveleth Taconite Co, will more than double the iron ore production of the Eveleth complex.

Major Transactions: Approximately 22% of Company's waterborne transportation revenues comes from the transportation of iron ore for Armco Steel Corp under a long-term contract expiring in 1995, and 15% comes from the transportation of iron ore for Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp under a long-term contract expiring in 1998.

Corporate Structure: Company owns and operates the largest independent unsubsidized U.S. tanker fleet. As transportation of the trans-Alaska pipeline petroleum from Alaska to other U.S. ports will be limited to unsubsidized U.S.-flag tankers, Company expects to account for a large share of the market. As of December 1975 Company's fleet totalled 46 vessels (34 under foreign-flag) with an aggregate capacity of 4,075,000 DWT. An additional 12 vessels (8 under foreign-flag) were on order with a carrying capacity of 703,700 DWT.

Joint Ventures: In June 1976 Company announced the construction of 2 bulk carriers to be jointly owned with Continental Grain Co, to whom they will be chartered for 12 years. The carriers will be built in Japanese shipyards. Continental Grain is controlled by the Fribourg family interests, also a major Company stockholder.

Major Transactions: Company has accounted for 20% of the grain shipments to the Soviet Union since 1972. Company charters for the Military Sealift Command of the U.S. Navy accounted for 18% and 13% of its 1974 and 1975 revenues respectively. Company charters to 2 major oil companies accounted for approximately 23% of 1974 and 1975 revenues. In August 1976 Company chartered 7 tankers to Standard Oil Co (Ohio) for periods of 2 to 3 years to transport Alaskan oil to U.S. ports.

Comments

Corporate Structure: Company operates 2 nuclear and 4 geothermal power plants. In 1976 Company spent over $430,000 in a campaign to defeat Proposition 15 on the California state ballot which would have restricted the proliferation of new nuclear power plants.

Joint Ventures: Through a Canadian subsidiary Company is a participant in the Alaskan Arctic Gas Pipeline Co (see NORTHERN NATURAL GAS CO). In 1976 Company entered into two 20-year joint ventures with Pacific Lighting Corp to import Indonesian liquified natural gas and to transport and share in liquified natural gas from southern Alaska. Under a tentative agreement the Indonesian gas will be transported in 3 LNG tankers operated and constructed by OGDEN CORP.

Major Transactions: In 1974 and 1975 Company purchased 44% and 42% of its gas from El Paso Natural Gas Co (ST), and 39% and 42% from a Canadian subsidiary through PACIFIC GAS TRANSMISSION CO. In 1974 Company entered into a 10-year agreement with STANDARD OIL CO OF CALIFORNIA to purchase low-sulphur oil. Company is also negotiating with EXXON CORP for a substantial share of its North Slope gas production.

Corporate Structure: Until October 1976 Company was the only U.S. scheduled airline which could not operate flights between 2 points in the 48 contiguous U.S. states. In October the CAB granted it its first domestic route between Detroit and Boston. Since 1969 Company has been operating at a loss. Company owns the Intercontinental Hotels Corp, an unconsolidated subsidiary which in 1976 operated 85 hotels or hotel projects in 51 countries. Since 1974 Company has held inconclusive merger studies with AMERICAN AIRLINES INC, EASTERN AIR LINES INC and TRANS WORLD AIRLINES INC. Discussions with AMERICAN were terminated in October 1975. In 1974 Company avoided bankruptcy by entering into a 1-year Secured Credit Agreement with 36 banks. A similar agreement was reached in 1975 with 22 banks. These agreements placed tight restrictions on Company's operations, including the purchase and leasing of planes, and established a maximum debt/asset ratio. In November 1976 the CAB named Company as the U.S. ticket sales agent for Aeroflot, the Soviet airline.

Changes in Corporate Control: In February 1975 Company reached a tentative agreement with the government of Iran whereby Iran would buy a controlling interest in Company's chain of Intercontinental Hotels, provide a direct loan to Company of $245 million, and have the option of purchasing up to 13% of Company's outstanding common stock. Despite U.S. government approval, the agreement was cancelled in the summer of 1975.

Joint Ventures: Company has a joint venture with Avions Marcel Dassault-Breguet Aviation, the largest French plane manufacturer, to market and repair executive aircraft manufactured by the French firm.

Major Transactions: In January 1975 the CAB approved a five year agreement between Company and TRANS WORLD AIRLINES INC to exchange their Pacific and Atlantic routes. The exchange is being challenged in court by NORTHWEST AIRLINES INC. Pacific routes now account for 38% of Company's airlines operations. In 1975 Company was the 58th largest defense contractor, with almost $96 million in revenues from military contracts. See also AMERICAN AIRLINES INC and WALTER KIDDE & CO INC.

Labor: Since 1969 Company's size has declined by 25% and its airline work force has been cut from 39,000 to 27,500 through massive layoffs. Subsequently, Company has been the subject of several suits charging it with race, sex and age discrimination in its employment practices.

Legal Proceedings: In 1976 Company was indicted by a federal grand jury for illegally transporting dangerous chemicals which caused the crash of one of its planes and the death of 3 employees.

Payments Disclosure: In August 1976 Company disclosed that it had made $116,000 in questionable payments between 1971-76.

Corporate Structure: Company's sole operations consist of initiating and defending law suits on behalf of Company, representing its interests in the reorganization proceedings of Penn Central Transportation Co (ST), a subsidiary, and performing certain administrative corporate functions. At the end of 1974 Company estimated that unless it received funds from law suits in which it was a plaintiff, or unless Penn Central Transportation Co was reorganized or liquidated in a manner favorable to it, Company would exhaust all its funds by the end of the third quarter of 1975 and would have to consider bankruptcy. In July 1976 Company filed for protection under Chapter XI of the Federal Bankruptcy Act.

Penn Central Transportation Co (ST): In 1970 Penn Central Transportation Co (ST) entered reorganization proceedings under Section 77 of the Federal Bankruptcy Act. During bankruptcy proceedings stockholders lose their power to elect directors and the trustees are appointed by the court. In 1976 most of its railroad property was reorganized into ConRail while it retained its other assets, including a pipeline, a Florida land development company, a coal concern, real estate, interests in amusement parks, trucking companies, hotels, as well as other railroads and the ConRail stock it received from the transfer of its rail property. Penn Central Transportation Co remains in bankruptcy reorganization proceedings, and in December 1976 it filed a reorganization plan in federal court with proposals to settle almost $1 billion in government and individual claims against it. Its trustees claim to have substantial support for the plan from every class of creditors and from the Department of Transportation. The plan has yet to be endorsed by PENN CENTRAL CO, the official owner of Penn Central Transportation Co stock and, as the most junior claimant in the proceedings, the party which stands to fare worst under the terms of the proposal by receiving only 10% of the stock in the reorganized company. The plan must be approved by the court. The reorganized company would continue to litigate for a higher valuation of the railroad property which was turned over to ConRail. The government intends to pay $506 million but the railroad's trustees have valued the property at $7 billion. Penn Central Transportation Co owns 23% of Madison Square Garden Corp. In 1975 it sold to Trump Enterprises Inc 2 inactive rail yards in New York for $67 million and in 1976 sold the Commodore Hotel for $10 million. In 1976 it also petitioned the court for permission to sell a New York building to Union Carbide for $11 million. See also CHESSIE SYSTEM INC and CONSOLIDATED NATURAL GAS CO.

Pennsylvania Co: By ICC order, Pennsylvania Co, a Company subsidiary held through Penn Central Transportation Co, must divest itself of its stockholdings in NORFOLK & WESTERN RY CO by October 15, 1979. In June 1976 Pennsylvania Co's subsidiary Buckeye Pipeline Co (ST) acquired most of the assets of Edgington Oil Co which had sales of $129.8 million in 1975.

Legal Proceedings: In September 1975, 20 different suits brought by the railroad's trustees, debenture holders and shareholders were consolidated and settled through a $12.6 million payment by Company's former directors and officers, investment bankers, accountants and others. In May 1975 the SEC filed a civil action against Company's Penn Central Transportation Co, various subsidiaries and several of Company's former officers and directors charging fraud in connection with the railroad's bankruptcy.

Natural Gas Pipeline Co of America (PG-CN)

Comments

New Ventures: Natural Gas Pipeline Co of America (ST) is considering the construction of 4 coal gassification plants in North Dakota where it is negotiating for the rights to ligneous coal reserves estimated at 1.2 billion tons. It is a participant in two groups selected in June 1976 by the federal Energy Research and Development Administration for the negotiation of contracts to design advanced coal gassification demonstration plants in Illinois and Ohio.

Joint Ventures: Natural Gas Pipeline Co of America is a participant in the Alaskan Arctic Gas Pipeline Co and the Northern Border Pipeline Co (see NORTHERN NATURAL GAS CO), a joint-venturer in the Stingray Pipeline Co (see PANHANDLE EASTERN PIPE LINE CO) and a participant in the High Island Offshore System (see TEXAS GAS TRANSMISSION CORP).

Major Transactions: In 1974 Natural Gas Pipeline Co of America sold over 88% of its gas to 5 utilities, 2 of which are Company subsidiaries. It provides 75% of the gas consumed in the Chicago metropolitan area. Natural has agreements to purchase gas from Colorado Interstate Corp (ST), Great Lakes Gas Transmission Co (ST) and UNITED GAS PIPE LINE CO. Natural has agreements and has made advance payments to purchase future gas production from SHELL OIL CO, STANDARD OIL CO OF CALIFORNIA, Mesa Petroleum Co, Burmah Oil Co, Kerr-McGee Corp and Imperial Oil Ltd (controlled by EXXON CORP). See also Mississippi River Transmission Corp (ST).

Transport of New Jersey (MP-UN)

Comments

Corporate Structure: Company estimates that 65% of its electricity will be generated by nuclear power by 1985.

Joint Ventures: See ALGONQUIN GAS TRANSMISSION CO.

Major Transactions: Company's gas is supplied by Transcontinental Gas Pipe Line Corp (ST), TEXAS EASTERN GAS TRANSMISSION CORP and TENNECO INC. For a number of years Amerada Hess Corp has been a major supplier to Company of oil and kerosene used for the generation of electricity and as raw materials for the manufacture of supplemental gas supplies. Company's purchases from Amerada Hess in 1975 and 1976 amounted to approximately $177 million and $183 million respectively, or about 70% of all of Company's purchases of such fuels. Company's major bus subsidiary, Transport of New Jersey (ST), has received subsidies from the State of New Jersey since 1972. These subsidies amounted to $8.5 million and $17.2 million in 1974 and 1975 respectively. In addition, under a "bus-buy-out" program approved by the Urban Mass Transportation Administration in 1974, the State of New Jersey purchased 514 of Transport's buses in October 1975 for $13 million and leased them back to Transport at no cost. Forty percent of the monies received by Transport from this sale were returned to the state as the state's share, which along with federal funds, purchased an additional 416 buses in 1976 to be leased to Transport at no cost.

Labor: In the spring of 1974 a Transport of New Jersey subsidiary, Maplewood Equipment Co, was struck for 54 days.

Comments

Corporate Structure: Company has over 32% of the U.S. cigarette market and operates the largest containerized-shipping fleet in the world, serving 113 port terminals in 47 countries. Nearly all of Company's petroleum operations are conducted outside the United States and its maritime transportation operations are related primarily to foreign trade. Approximately 25% of its net annual sales of tobacco products and 10% of its net annual sales of food, beverage and aluminum products consist of exports and sales by its foreign operations. In September 1974 Company sold its shipping operations between Puerto Rico and U.S. ports to the Puerto Rico Maritime Shipping Authority. In November 1975 Company lost its right to acquire United States Lines from WALTER KIDDE & CO INC due to the failure to obtain FMC and ICC approval. Under a supplemental agreement Company was obligated to find another buyer for United States Lines and pay WALTER KIDDE $65 million. Dillon Read & Co, one of Company's principal debt security underwriters, was in charge of finding a buyer. In November 1976 Ingram Corp, a privately-owned conglomerate with an inland barge line and over $900 million in revenues, was negotiating to buy the water carrier. However, in December a tentative agreement for the sale was reached with WUI Inc, the parent holding company of Western Union International which provides international communications service and had 1975 revenues of $86 million. Under the agreement WALTER KIDDE would receive a new issue of voting preferred stock convertible into 20% of United States Lines' common stock. In May 1976 Company agreed to purchase the U.S. oil and gas operations of Burmah Oil Co for $520 million. The assets were mostly those purchased by Burmah from SIGNAL COS in 1974.

Changes in Corporate Control: In April 1975 Malcom P. McLean, a major Company stockholder, and Diamondhead Corp, 82% of which was owned by Mr. McLean, respectively sold 1,000,000 and 400,000 of their convertible preferred Company stock to underwriters who converted the shares into 2,100,000 shares of Company's common stock and sold them to the public.

Major Transactions: In 1974 and 1975 government cargo accounted for approximately 13.7% and 13.6% of transportation revenues. In 1975 Company was the 39th largest defense contractor with almost $154 million in military contracts.

Payments Disclosure: In September 1976 Company disclosed that that it had made $190,000 in illegal political contributions between 1968-73 and that it had made over $25 million in "questionable overseas payments" over the last 5 years including at least $19 million by Sea-Land Service Inc for possibly illegal rebates to shippers. In January 1977 Sea-Land agreed to pay a $4 million civil penalty in settlement of FMC charges related to the rebates. This is the largest settlement in the history of any transportation regulatory agency.

Corporate Structure: In 1975 international sales accounted for 45% and 22% of the truck manufacturing division's and aerospace division's revenues respectively. In May 1975 Company acquired approximately 50.5% of the outstanding stock of Universal Oil Products Co, which subsequently changed its name to UOP Inc. UOP had 1975 revenues of $825 million. It provides petroleum and petrochemical services, engages in construction and manufactures metal and other products. The UOP acquisition, arranged by the New York investment bank Lazard Freres, was made with a portion of the proceeds from the 1974 sale of Company's oil and gas operations to Burmah Oil Inc. In April 1976 Dresser Industries Inc proposed to acquire Company. Dresser withdrew its bid when Company countered with a joint tender offer with Gulf + Western Industries Inc for 6.4 million of its own shares, 3.9 million of which would be acquired by Gulf + Western. Lazard Freres acted as dealer-manager in this bid. As of November 1976 Company had acquired about 10% of its stock but Gulf + Western had acquired only 0.2%.

Changes in Corporate Control: In December 1976 Capitalfin International Ltd, an Italian investment bank, sold its 900,000 shares of Company's common stock to several unidentified mutual funds. The shares were originally acquired from Cemp Investments Ltd, a Montreal-based group controlled by the Bronfman family interests.

Major Transactions: In 1975 Company was the 63rd largest defense contractor with over $90 million in revenues from military contracts.

Labor: In 1974 the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission filed a suit against a Company subsidiary for discriminatory employment practices.

Payments Disclosure: In February 1976 UOP disclosed that it had made $90 million in revenues from military contracts.

Comments

Corporate Structure: Company owns 91% of Offshore Co, one of the world's largest oil and gas offshore drilling contractors.

Joint Ventures: Beginning in 1977-78 Southern Natural Gas Co (ST) expects to import Algerian liquified natural gas under an agreement with EL PASO CO. In 1974-75 Company participated in ventures headed by STANDARD OIL CO OF CALIFORNIA and Shell Oil Co which acquired federal offshore leases in the Gulf of Mexico. A Company subsidiary is engaged in joint ventures with STANDARD OIL CO (INDIANA) and a member of the ROYAL DUTCH/SHELL GROUP to equip ships with offshore drilling units. Company has a joint venture with Boise Cascade to run pulp, paper and timber operations and to develop oil, gas and mineral resources on a 400,000-acre tract of land in Louisiana and Texas.

Major Transactions: Southern Natural Gas Co purchases 10% of its natural gas from UNITED GAS PIPE LINE CO and 22% from Sea Robin Pipeline Co (ST). In October 1976 Southern Natural Gas Co contracted with the State of Alaska to buy 650 billion cubic feet of gas over a 20-year period. This represents 17% of the state's royalty reserves from the Alaskan North Slope.

Payments Disclosure: In March 1977 Company disclosed that 2 subsidiaries made payoffs to government officials in 2 foreign countries.

Comments

Corporate Structure: In early 1976 Company expressed an interest in acquiring a 460-mile line in the Delmarva Peninsula from the bankrupt Penn Central Transportation Co (ST). The acquisition did not materialize when Company and unions could not agree on contract terms and work rules for the transferred workers. See MISSISSIPPI RIVER CORP for merger plans.

Labor: Company layed off 2,300 employees when it closed its repair shops for 6 months in 1975.

Payments Disclosure: In February 1976 Earl Butz, then Secretary of Agriculture, admitted he attended a Company hunting lodge party at the Company's expense. Butz finally agreed to pay half of his expenses, the government paying the other half. Butz claimed that lower-level agriculture officials have been making such Christmas visits to the Company's lodge for years. Company is a major shipper of farm produce.

A privately-owned company for which no information is available except from published sources.

Corporate Structure: Company was formed in 1972 to serve as the holding company for almost all of Howard Hughes' interests. Besides Hughes Air Corp (ST), Company controls Hughes Helicopters, one of the largest U.S. producers of military and civilian helicopters; 5 hotel-casinos, 1 casino, a television station, aircraft services and airport facilities in Las Vegas; large land holdings in the Las Vegas area; gold and silver mining operations in Nevada; real estate in southern California; a hotel in the Bahamas; and a cable television company and other television interests in New York. Howard Hughes died on April 5, 1976, leaving an estate then estimated to be worth $1.5 billion. Several parties are vying for control of Hughes' holdings, the disposition of which will be decided by the courts.

Major Transactions: In 1975 it was disclosed that the Glomar Explorer, an ocean mining ship built and owned by Company, was actually designed and financed by the CIA to recover a sunken Soviet submarine. See also WALTER KIDDE & CO INC.

Legal Proceedings: In March 1975 the SEC accused Howard Hughes of fraud and manipulation in connection with the 1969 acquisition of Air West, the airline now operated by Hughes Air Corp (ST). The SEC filed a complaint asking that Hughes and 9 others be enjoined from such violations in the future and that they be required to return an estimated $48 million which the SEC claimed were illicit profits resulting from the acquisition. An SEC civil fraud suit against the take-over is pending. A dismissed 1974 federal indictment that had charged Hughes and 3 others with fraudulently manipulating stock in the Air West take-over was also reinstated by a federal appeal court in May 1976.

Payments Disclosure: In 1972 Howard Hughes contributed $100,000 to President Nixon's reelection campaign.

Corporate Structure: In 1975 Company restructured its operations along functional lines into 16 separate companies, including 4 engaged in oil exploration, production, refining and marketing, and others in gas, oil well services, pipeline transportation, computer and research operations, shipbuilding and repair, coal and geothermal energy development, and a miscellaneous-ventures company. In 1976 it changed its name to Sun Co Inc. In 1975 Company initiated maritime freight transport operations through a new subsidiary, Totem Ocean Trailer Express Inc. Company's shipping fleet also includes 10 tankers with a total deadweight tonnage of 922,000. In 1975 Company acquired St Johnsbury Trucking Co, a Class I motor carrier with 1974 operating revenues of almost $57 million. In December 1975 Company's Venezuelan operations were nationalized.

Joint Ventures: See PHILLIPS PETROLEUM CO.

Major Transactions: See INTERPROVINCIAL PIPE LINE LTD.

Payments Disclosure: In 1975 Company disclosed payments of $96,250 made by a subsidiary to Canadian political parties over the last 5 years, and will soon determine whether illegal political contributions were made in the United States. In August 1976 Company disclosed another $2,000 in questionable foreign payments.

MIDWESTERN GAS TRANSMISSION CO (PG-CN)
Tennessee Gas Pipeline Co (div.) (PG-CN)

Comments

Corporate Structure: Company has a 24% interest in Philadelphia Life Insurance Co. Company had a 40% interest in Houston National Bank before the bank was merged in April 1975 into Republic of Texas Corp, a bank holding company. Company now has a 5.5% interest in the holding company. In February 1976 Company announced a merger plan with Anaconda Co but terminated the agreement when it was successfully challenged by ATLANTIC RICHFIELD CO. In December 1976 Company filed for FPC authorization to build a new 498-mile pipeline in the Northeastern United States. The pipeline will transport Algerian gas unloaded in eastern Canada from the Maine-Canadian border to the Tennessee Gas Pipeline Co (ST) system.

Joint Ventures: Company is a member of the Polar Gas Project (see TRANSCANADA PIPELINES LTD). Company is a member of the Illinois Coal Gassification Group which was selected in 1976 to build a federally-funded $275 million coal gassification demonstration plant. Company is a member of COGAS (see CONSOLIDATED NATURAL GAS CO).

Major Transactions: Tennessee Gas Pipeline Co (ST) sells approximately 42% of its natural gas to COLUMBIA GAS SYSTEM INC, CONSOLIDATED NATURAL GAS CO and NATIONAL FUEL GAS CO. See also MIDWESTERN GAS TRANSMISSION CO. Company supplies half of the gas consumed in Maine, New Hampshire and Massachusetts, and about a quarter of the gas consumed in New York and Pennsylvania (see EASTERN GAS & FUEL ASSOCIATES, PUBLIC SERVICE ELECTRIC & GAS CO, TEXAS GAS TRANSMISSION CORP and EQUITABLE GAS CO). In March 1977 Company disclosed that it may have failed to meet all federal regulatory requirements when, in 1965, it began diverting to intrastate customers about 350 billion cubic feet of natural gas which were earmarked for interstate sales. Company later stated that these transfers were not "improper," had nothing to do with the winter 1976 gas shortage, and was not an attempt to withhold gas from the interstate market. In October 1976 Company signed a 20-year agreement to purchase 200 billion cubic feet of liquified natural gas from the Algerian state-owned oil company. Company is jointly building with TEXAS EASTERN TRANSMISSION CORP a terminal in New Jersey to receive the LNG. In 1975 Company was the 28th largest defense contractor with almost $242 million in revenues from military contracts. In June 1976 Adm. H.G. Rickover charged that Company's shipbuilding subsidiary was deliberately and substantially overstating its claims against the Navy for work on nuclear-powered ships and submarines. According to Rickover, the settlement of these claims would be "one of the biggest ripoffs in the history of the United States." In August 1976 Company annouced a settlement for one of its claims, but no details were disclosed. Company's shipbuilding subsidiary also has a $297.7 million contract to build 3 liquified natural gas tankers for El Paso Natural Gas Co (ST). In November 1976 a Company subsidiary contracted with the State of Alaska to buy 1.3 trillion cubic feet of gas over a 20-year period. This represents 35% of the State's royalty reserves from the Alaskan North Slope.

Payments Disclosure: In February 1976 Company disclosed "sensitive" payments to foreign agents totalling $9 million between 1970-75 and an additional $500,000 paid to the military in a foreign country for employee protection. Company maintained a fund for domestic political contributions from which $180,000 in legal contributions were made in California. It also made cash payments to state public utility regulators and to a Louisiana judge who decided a labor case involving it.

Comments

Corporate Structure: In August 1976 Company implemented a corporate restructuring plan to establish a holding company, Texas Eastern Corp, with Company as its subsidiary.

Capital Structure: In June 1975 Company issued 2,400,000 new shares of cumulative preferred stock.

Joint Ventures: Company is a participant in the Alaskan Arctic Gas Pipeline Co and the Northern Border Pipeline Co (see NORTHERN NATURAL GAS CO). Company is a member of the Polar Gas Project (see TRANSCANADA PIPELINES LTD). Transwestern Pipeline Co (ST) and Pacific Lighting Corp have jointly filed an application with the FPC to build and operate a coal gassification plan plant. See also EASTERN GAS & FUEL ASSOCIATES and TENNECO INC.

Major Transactions: Company sells approximately 55% of its gas to ALGONGUIN GAS TRANSMISSION CO (for which it is the sole supplier) and subsidiaries of CONSOLIDATED NATURAL GAS CO and COLUMBIA GAS SYSTEM INC. All of Transwestern Pipeline Co's (ST) sales are made under long-term contracts with Pacific Lighting Corp and Cities Service Gas Co (ST). Company is also a major supplier for EQUITABLE GAS CO, NATIONAL FUEL GAS CO, and PUBLIC SERVICE ELECTRIC & GAS CO.

Legal Proceedings: According to an October 1976 ruling by the FMC, GULF OIL CORP may have to pay Company as much as $90 million for failing to meet its gas supply contract to Company since 1973. This is the first case of a punitive ruling by the FMC against a natural gas producer for failure to meet contracted gas deliveries. GULF is appealing the ruling.

Comments

Corporate Structure: In 1975 Company acquired All American Transport Inc, the 56th largest Class I motor carrier and a leading midwestern trucker with 1975 operating revenues of over $95 million.

Joint Ventures: American Commercial Barge Line Co (ST) is engaged in a rail-barge transportation joint venture with BURLINGTON NORTHERN INC to transport western coal to southern utilities. Company, Michigan Wisconsin Pipe Line Co (ST), Natural Gas Pipeline Co of America (ST), UNITED GAS PIPE LINE CO, and TRANSCO COS INC have formed a joint venture, High Island Offshore System, to build a 200-mile offshore pipeline in the Gulf of Mexico. The project was approved by the FMC in July 1976. Company is planning a major coal gassification project with the Commonwealth of Kentucky. In 1971 Company acquired coal reserves which, together with an equal amount of reserves owned by a partner, could produce 3.4 trillion cubic feet of gas.

Major Transactions: In 1975 Company purchased 24% of its natural gas from UNITED GAS PIPE LINE CO, TEXAS EASTERN TRANS TRANSMISSION CO and TENNECO INC. Company sells approximately 45% of its natural gas to TEXAS EASTERN TRANSMISSION CORP, Columbia Gas Transmission Corp (ST), Consolidated Gas Supply Corp (ST) and Michigan Wisconsin Pipe Line Co (ST). The transportation of autos and trucks for the 4 big auto manufacturers accounts for approximately half of Company's trucking revenues.

Comments
Corporate Structure: Company is Australia's largest transport operator. In July 1976 a federal judge ruled that the operating rights of bankrupt REA Express Inc should be sold to Company's major U.S. subsidiary, Alltrans Express USA. The ruling was opposed by REA's former employees who had organized as Reamco Inc to purchase the rights. The ICC has postponed approval of the sale due to opposition from 12 other carriers and the American Trucking Association, who want REA's operating authority dissolved.

Joint Ventures: See SHULMAN TRANSPORT ENTERPRISES INC.

Comments
Corporate Structure: Company's leasing operations include North American Car Corp, which has the third largest fleet of privately-owned specialized railroad cars in the world and operates in the United States, Canada, Europe and Mexico.

Major Transactions: In 1975 approximately 18% of Company's airline business consisted of services for the Military Airlift Command and the U.S. Postal Service. Company's top 11 air freight customers accounted for 47% of revenues in Company's domestic airline operations, including UNITED PARCEL SERVICE INC which accounted for 19%.

Legal Proceedings: In January 1976 Flying Tiger Line Inc (ST) pleaded no contest to and was fined for having illegally lowered its air transportation rates for certain customers. Company admitted that this practice, in addition to the payment of excessive commissions to its air freight agents, had been in effect since 1970, averaging 3.8% of international freight revenues over the 5-year period.

Corporate Structure: In April 1976 Company terminated negotiations with its 60 institutional lenders after having failed to reach an agreement on a 4 year deferment of itssenior debt. Company estimates it will need to raise $2 billion over the next 5 years to reequip its aircraft fleet but has no arrangements for external financing (see "Major Transactions"). See also PAN AMERICAN WORLD AIRWAYS INC.

Capital Structure: In October 1976 Company cancelled plans for a public sale of 2 million common shares. The offering was to have been managed by Dillon, Read & Co.

Major Transactions: In June Company reached an agreement with Boeing Co to defer indefinitely the delivery of 14 new jet aircraft. See GREYHOUND CORP and PAN AMERICAN WORLD AIRWAYS INC.

Labor: Company is a defendant in several suits brought by former and present employees and the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission charging it with discriminatory employment practices.

Payments Disclosure: In 1976-1977 Company disclosed that it had made some $1.3 million in questionable payments, including $307,000 to shippers and air freight forwarders in the United States, $672,000 in rebates to cargo sales agents in West Germany, and $70,000 in indirect rebates to shippers and cargo agents in 3 other foreign countries. Hilton International Co, a Company subsidiary, was said to have paid $90,000 to foreign government officials to resolve a labor conflict and avoid a fine, and Canteen Corp, another subsidiary, paid $3,500 to a government employee who reviewed Canteen's bids. Canteen also received questionable allowances of $7,000 from beer and dairy-product suppliers. In September 1975 Company and 18 other airlines pleaded no contest to charges of making rebates in violation of the Federal Aviation Act.

Corporate Structure: Approximately 72% of Company's net assets are located outside the United States, including 53% in Central America. In 1975 approximately 51% of Company's banana supply originated in Panama, Costa Rica and Honduras. Company purchases an additional 12% of its bananas from 1 Philippino supplier and 11% from 1 Ecuadorian supplier. As of 1975 Company controlled 33% of the banana market in the United States and Canada, 41% in Europe and 14% in Japan. According to an insider, Company's main asset is its marketing operations. In January 1976 the Government of Panama purchased all of Company's agricultural land and leased part of it back to Company for 5 years. In August 1976 Company discontinued its commercial shipping operations out of the United States. Its fleet of 46 ships will now exclusively transport bananas. In 1975 Company moved its executive offices from New York to Boston where it has traditionally been based.

Changes in Corporate Control: As of May 1976 the American Financial Corp, represented on Company's board of directors by its chairman and president, Carl H. Lindner, had increased its interest in Company to 21% of its outstanding shares. As of December 1975 the Swedish shipping company Rederi AB Salenia owned more than 6% of Company voting stock. This shipping firm transported all the bananas marketed by Company in Northern Europe and Western United States in 1975 (see MARITIME FRUIT CARRIER CO LTD).

Payments Disclosure: In December 1976 Company made public the results of an internal investigation into its questionable payments. These included $1.25 million paid to government officials in Honduras to obtain favorable tax treatment, $200,000 in political contributions in a European country, rumored to be Italy, and a myriad of smaller payments in cash and kind to foreign government officials. The investigation was carried out in response to an SEC suit, brought in April 1975, which charged Company with failing to disclose the bribes. The suit was filed following an investigation of the February 1975 suicide of Company's chairman, Eli Black. Although the settlement to the suit enjoined Company from failing to disclose such payments in the future, Company's counsel stated in May 1976 that it was not bound to disclose "customary payments" abroad.

Comments

Corporate Structure: In November 1975 the FPC approved a settlement to the 1974 spin-off of Company from its former parent Pennzoil Co. In August 1976 Company stockholders approved the creation of United Energy Resources Inc as the parent of Company and its subsidiaries. The stock conversion was 1-to-1.

Changes in Corporate Control: As part of the November 1975 FPC approval of Company's spin-off from Pennzoil Co, Pennzoil was forced to rescind the 1 million shares of preferred stock that it had received in the original agreement.

Major Transactions: Company purchases 11% of its gas from a subsidiary of Pennzoil Co, its former parent, and 15% from Sea Robin Pipeline Co (ST). This represents 50% of Sea Robin's production, of which 25% is originally obtained from a subsidiary of Pennzoil Co. Company sells 58% of its gas to 4 interstate pipeline companies. Company's major wholly-owned subsidiary, United Texas Transmission Co, sells 52% of its gas to the electric utility which operates in the Houston metropolitan area, and 23% to the gas utility which serves the Texas Gulf Coast. Corporate Structure: In July 1975 the ICC authorized Company to operate in all 48 contiguous states of the United States. Company also filed for ICC authority to merge its 2 principal subsidiaries. In 1976 Company opened its first foreign subsidiary in West Germany.

Changes in Corporate Control: During 1975 Company purchased 1,902,863 shares of common stock from its shareholders, distributed 695,607 shares to its Manager Stock Trust under its Managers Incentive Plan, and issued 809,187 shares in dividends to its shareowners of record.

Major Transactions: See TIGER INTERNATIONAL INC.

Labor: In 1974 Company was struck by Teamster locals for 84 days in New York and 20 days in southern California. In June 1975 a Teamster local carried out a 4-day wildcat strike against Company in New Jersey. In September 1976, 17,000 Company employees belonging to 79 Teamster locals struck Company in 15 Eastern states to prevent it from replacing full-time workers with part-time workers. The employees also claim that Company has used its Thrift Plan, a pension and saving plan to which both full and part-time workers contribute, as a source of financing expansion and automation in order to reduce the number of full-time workers. The strike was settled and a new contract signed in December 1976. Company backed down on the part-timers issue and the union gave up on its demand to control pension funds of part-time workers.

Legal Proceedings: Company is the subject of several antitrust suits brought by other motor carriers and transportation companies charging it with monopolizing the small parcel business and delivery service in all or part of the country.

United States Lines Inc (WC-UN)

Comments

Corporate Structure: Company is the leading U.S. manufacturer of cargo containers and a major producer of truck trailers. In December 1976 Company concluded the terms of the sale of United States Lines Inc (ST) (see RJ REYNOLDS INDUSTRIES INC). In recent years Company has been the target of aborted take-over attempts by Loews Corp and Sun Chemical Corp.

Changes in Corporate Control: In 1976 Teledyne Inc acquired 19% of Company's stock.

Major Transactions: Company is the leading world supplier of aircraft interior equipment with United Air Lines Inc (ST), PAN AMERICAN WORLD AIRWAYS INC, NATIONAL AIRLINES INC, Braniff Airways Inc (ST) and Hughes Air Corp (ST) among its major customers. United States Lines Inc charters 17 of its 39 vessels to the Military Sealift Command of the U.S. Navy. In 1975 Company was the 69th largest defense contractor with almost $81 million in revenues from military contracts.

Payments Disclosure: In March 1977 United States Lines Inc disclosed details of questionable payments made since 1970, including (1) $5,000 paid to an elected U.S. government official "in an attempt to ensure passage of favorable legislation," (2) $2 million in direct rebates to shippers, (3) between $400,000 and $600,000 in noncash rebates to shippers through short-weighing of cargoes and other procedures, and (4) $82,000 in cash for other purposes, including $34,000 "which may have been used to resolve labor problems." The rebate payments had been under investigation by two federal grand juries and the Federal Maritime Administration since last year. Company also disclosed about $1 million in questionable domestic and foreign payments, and accounting procedures made by 6 other subsidiaries since 1970.

Changes in Corporate Control: In April 1976 Company stockholders approved a plan to purchase all of the 2,508,832 shares of common stock held by Kirk Kerkorian. Company was advised in the purchase agreement by Salomon Brothers, a New York investment bank. The sale was made amidst rumors that Howard Hughes of Hughes Air Corp (ST) and Edward Daly, the owners of World Airways Inc, the 24th largest U.S. airline, were also bidding to acquire Kerkorian's stock.

Comments

Corporate Structure: In 1974 Company formed a new subsidiary, Williams Exploration Co, to manage and develop its oil and gas properties. In 1975 Company sold its merchandising and pipeline construction subsidiaries. The discontinuance of its pipeline construction operations, the largest in the United States, will be finalized upon the 1976 completion of its contract to build one third of the Alaska pipeline. This subsidiary was also a major contractor for pipeline projects in Peru, Algeria, Lybia, Nigeria, Oman and Saudi Arabia. In 1976 Company will begin operating an intrastate gas pipeline in Louisiana. Company owns a 20.8% interest in the parent holding company of the Bank of Oklahoma NA, a commercial bank with 1975 assets of over $700 million.

Joint Ventures: In 1975-76 Company engaged in joint venture fertilizer operations in South Korea, Jordan, Ireland and Brazil, and is negotiating a similar joint venture in Pakistan. Company, Newmont Mining Corp, Bechtel Corp, Fluor Corp and Equitable Life Assurance Society of the U.S. formed Peabody Holding Co which in November 1976 agreed to acquire Peabody Coal Co from Kennecott Copper Corp. The acquisition, which excludes Peabody's Australian operations and will cost $1.1 billion, is subject to FTC approval. In December 1976 Uranium Enrichment Associates, a joint venture between Company, Bechtel Group and Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co, suspended plans to build the first uranium enrichment plant in the U.S. private sector at a cost of over $3.5 billion.

Payments Disclosure: In December 1976 Company disclosed that certain discontinued operations had made questionable foreign payments totalling $854,225.

NOTES TO PART TWO INTRODUCTION

1. The number of companies profiled in Part Two (176) varies from the number of sample transportation operators (194) because some operators share the same parent.

2. In most cases the number of votes is equal to the number of shares. Each class of stock, the total number of shares outstanding, the number of votes per share and the total votes per class are listed under the heading "Stock Structure" in the company profiles. It should be noted that this study only includes classes of stock which were eligible to vote at the annual meeting of 1975.

3. These standards were derived from the specifications of the Model Corporate Disclosure Requirement (MCDR) which was recommended in January 1975 by a federal Interagency Steering Committee on Uniform Corporate Reporting. The MCDR recommended the disclosure of the top 30 voting stockholders after the aggregation procedure, but no holder with less than 1/10th of 1 percent of a company's outstanding stock. For the purposes of the CDE study the standard was raised somewhat to keep the number of holders within manageable limits.

4. A comprehensive list of banks and their nominees is published annually by the American Society of Corporate Secretaries. Some large holdings, however, are reported under Cede & Co., the nominee of the Depository Trust Co, a stock clearing house associated with the New York Stock Exchange. Cede acts as the record holder for numerous bank and broker members to simplify stock transactions, but has no authority to vote, purchase or sell the stock. Where possible, Cede holdings were disaggregated and attributed to their actual holders.

5. Bank holding companies were listed only if they controlled more than one large financial institution holding significant amounts of stock. Otherwise only the banking subsidiary was listed. In a few cases, particularly for mutual funds and mutual insurance companies, a holder is determined to be controlled by another entity if they share a majority of their boards of directors.

6. The term "management" is used in two distinct ways. On the one hand, the term is used to describe the administrative power exercised by an investment advisor over a mutual fund. In other instances, the term is used to describe holdings over which institutional investors exercise any management authority, i.e. voting authority, investment discretion, investment advice and trustee authority. These managed holdings must be distinguished from stock merely held in custodial accounts over which the institutional holder exercises no authority whatsoever.

7. The definition of "management powers" was developed by the Comptroller of the Currency for the annual reports filed by nationally-chartered banks on their holdings. Under "voting power" the CDE has combined all shares over which the holder exercises sole or shared voting authority, as reported to the Comptroller. In six cases where the CDE could identify both parties sharing the voting power over a single holding, it was listed in the "voting power" column under only one party but in the "total managed holdings" column under both parties. This duplication was eliminated in the "total" for the managed column by deducting the double entry before the final addition. In a few cases the banks did not indicate whether they exercised voting authority over any of the holdings that they managed. In one such case, Provident National Bank, the figures listed in the voting column represent the bank's sole and shared investment authority.

8. In several instances where a brokerage firm controls an investment advisor which in turn manages mutual funds, the fund's holdings are listed as the "managed holdings" of the broker.

9. None of the other holders have an entry in "additional holdings" and their "voting power" and "total managed holdings" are always identical.

CORPORATE DATA EXCHANGE, INC.

The Corporate Data Exchange, Inc. (CDE) is an independent tax-exempt research organization formed in 1975 to investigate economic concentration and corporate control. In addition to publishing the Stock Ownership Directory series, CDE maintains a data base on industries and companies to answer specific requests from public interest groups, trade unions, government agencies, and other organizations. Since its inception CDE has provided information to such organizations as the National Council of Churches, the Amalgamated Clothing & Textile Workers Union, the U.N. Center on Transnational Corporations, and the U.S. Senate Subcommittee on Reports, Accounting and Management.

1. Stock Ownership Directory Series: this volume on Agribusiness is the second in CDE's industry-by-industry series which began with Transportation (August 1977). Each directory profiles the largest companies in these areas. Future directories will include: Banking & Finance (Fall 1979), Energy (Winter 1980), Defense, Communications, and Mining. Corporations: Transportation $150; all others $250. Individuals and Non-Profit Institutions: Transportation $60; all others $75.

2. Directory Updates: each volume will be updated at least every four years and more frequently if there is sufficient interest.

3. Computer Tapes and Cards: the stockholder information contained in each directory is available on magnetic tape or punch cards. Inquire for rates.

4. Handbook Series: data on specific issues will be published on an occasional basis. The first in this series, CDE Handbook: U.S. Bank Loans to South Africa (August 1978) documents all identifiable U.S. bank loans to South Africa, including Exim financing, from 1972-mid 1978. Over 100 U.S.-controlled and -related banks are listed. Corporations: $25. Individuals and Non-Profit Institutions: $3.

The second handbook, CDE Handbook: Pension Fund Investments (May 1979), examines 150 public and private pension fund portfolios for investments in 100 companies which meet one or more of four criteria: 1) predominantly non-unionized, 2) poor record in the field of occupational safety and health, 3) failure to fully meet equal employment opportunity guidelines, and 4) investment in South Africa. Corporations: $75. Individuals and Non-Profit Institutions: $25.

5. Stockholder Profile Service: photocopies of previously published company profiles are available. Inquire for complete list. Fee per profile: $5. Special stockholder profiles on individual public corporations can be compiled upon request. Fee per profile: $250.

Non-profit organizations with small budgets may be eligible for lower rates on all CDE publications and services. Please inquire for terms.

Preface

The CDE Stock Ownership Directory: Agribusiness is a unique reference guide to the nation's leading agribusiness companies. CDE profiles the largest stockholders of 222 public and private corporations, more than 150 of which are large enough to be ranked by Fortune.

This volume is the second in CDE's Stock Ownership Directory series. Each volume presents accurate and detailed information on the principal voting stockholders of major U.S. corporations within a specific industry. Future directories will cover Banking & Finance, Energy, and the Defense Industry. Users of our first volume on the Transportation Industry will notice several improvements in format and presentation. Each profile page has been standardized to facilitate quick and easy reference. Extensive cross-indexes have been added for the top five stockholders in each company, the legal counsels, investment banks, and accounting firms.

Every effort has been made to guarantee the accuracy of the data. Invariably some errors are bound to appear in such a comprehensive compilation. We urge the readers to call these to our attention and welcome suggestions about how to make future directories more useful.

Many organizations and individuals made significant contributions to this study, particularly in the identification of the largest companies in each agribusiness sector. We are particularly indebted to the Wisconsin Food System Research Project, the Agricultural Data Center in Boston, and Dr. Henry J. Frundt of the Interfaith Center on Corporate Responsibility for their expert advice and assistance throughout the course of the research.

This study was made possible through grants from the United Presbyterian Church, the United Methodist Church, the Seed Fund, the Presbyterian Church in the United States, the United Church of Christ, and the Marianist Provincial House, Province of New York.

The Editors

Guide to the Directory

This Directory consists of four parts. Part One provides basic facts about the agribusiness sectors examined and the method of selection for the 222 companies. Part Two presents profiles of 153 of these firms which are public U.S. corporations. Each profile ranks the principal voting stockholders and identifies key institutional relationships. Following the profiles is a Control Chart identifying the major stockholders and institutional relationships of the remaining 69 entities. These companies include tightly-held and private firms, cooperatives, and foreign corporations. Part Three consists of a General Financial Information Chart on all 222 companies and two Foreign Operations Charts. Part Four contains four indexes of company profile data. Unless otherwise noted, all data is for December 31, 1976. The following abstract will help the user become more familiar with the structure of this Directory.

HOW TO LOOK UP A COMPANY

A company's list of major stockholders and key institutional relationships: see the Company Index on page 7.

A breakdown of a company's agribusiness operations: see the alphabetical chart on page 32.

A company's general financial information: see the alphabetical chart on page 247.

A company's foreign agribusiness operations: see the alphabetical charts on pages 253 and 258.

The largest stockholders in agribusiness companies: see the index on page 261.

Introduction

The term "agribusiness" is often associated with large-scale corporate farming operations, or with the farm production and food processing system. In its broadest application, however, agribusiness – also called agro-industry – is much more than this. It represents the whole complex of economic activity by which the food and fiber system is produced, manufactured, and distributed. The agribusiness system can be viewed as spanning the manufacture of equipment and products used by farmers in crop and livestock production; the manufacture of inputs used by food processors such as containers, packaging, and energy; the transportation and distribution of raw and processed food and fiber goods; and the provision of related services of storage, finance, advertising, and research.

From this perspective of integrated operations, agribusiness is the nation's largest area of economic activity. It accounts for one-fifth of the nation's total employment, with more than 15 million owning or working on farms, or employed in the industries supplying inputs to farmers, and processing and distributing farm products. Agribusiness operations generate about one-sixth of the country's Gross National Product, and earn a quarter of the country's export revenues.[1]

The CDE study addresses three major agribusiness sectors: (1) Farm Inputs, which consists of the major manufacturing industries which service farms as their primary market, such as agricultural implements, livestock and poultry feed, fertilizer, and pesticides; (2) Processing, which encompasses all foods of farm and nonfarm origin, plus tobacco and pet foods; and (3) Distribution, including wholesale, retail, and food service marketing outlets for food and tobacco products (see Table I). Many companies engaged in direct commercial crop production are also covered in this study, although the list is not exhaustive.*

The term "agribusiness" reflects the fact that agriculture has evolved from an area of relative self-sufficiency to a system thoroughly interwoven into large segments of the industrial economy.[2] The term was first used during the early 1950's, when the changing nature of agriculture was becoming apparent. High productivity, a consequence of the technological advances realized during the previous decade, provided the impetus for large-scale operations in all facets of the food and fiber system.

As each stage has become more closely linked, the companies engaged in agribusiness activity have become larger and more closely integrated in their system operations. Today it is not uncommon to find major food processors performing the functions of transportation, packaging, warehousing, wholesaling, and even retailing through restaurant chains – operations which used to be handled by hundreds of independent firms. A number of processors have integrated backward into farm production, either directly or through contractual arrangements with farmers. Retail supermarket chains have come to manufacture some processed food items such as dairy and bakery products. Input manufacturers like feed grain companies often have major food processing operations, or are closely related to other areas of input manufacture, and many have assumed credit and loan services to farmers. Efficiencies of large-scale operations, guaranteed sources of materials, and decentralized but closely co-ordinated marketing arrangements have brought about a major increase in the rationalization of production and distribution operations.

Farmers' cooperatives are no exception to this trend. Formed initially as local marketing organizations for farmers' produce and supplies, co-ops have merged and consolidated their businesses, joined in federations, and formed regional and centralized cooperative associations. The vast majority of co-ops are not engaged in manufacturing activity. Most co-ops which handle farm supplies or farmers' produce serve solely as marketing agents between the corporation and the farmer. However, a small number of the 7,700 co-ops now in existence have developed major manufacturing capabilities in both farm supplies and food processing, and have grown to the multi-billion dollar proportions of a large corporation.

Co-ops have come to account for between one-quarter and one-third of all farmers' transactions. Net cooperative business (excluding inter-cooperative transactions) totalled $42 billion in 1975, a five-fold increase since 1950. Their share of fertilizer, petroleum and farm chemicals marketed has doubled, and the percentage of certain produce they market has substantially increased (see Table II).

Their growth and expansion has been facilitated by special tax exemptions and financing structures not available to public and private corporations. These corporations have responded by raising demands that cooperatives be subject to regulations similar to those governing non-cooperative entities. At the same time, however, some corporations have joined co-ops, and are participating in joint ventures which have enabled

* It was not possible within the scope of this study to discuss direct corporate farming as a separate sector of agribusiness (see discussion of contract farming under "Processing"). Also excluded are input industries such as petroleum or automotive; inedible farm products such as fibers; forestry products; and the manufacture of containers and food processing machinery. them to take advantage of the cooperatives' financial benefits.

The 222 public corporations, cooperatives, and private companies included in this directory form the backbone of the three agribusiness sectors addressed in this study. The following overview of these sectors provides a framework for understanding the agribusiness system and the primary economic forces operating within it.

INPUTS

The production techniques introduced since the second quarter of this century have transformed the structure of U.S. agriculture. New applications of fertilizers and pesticides, high-yielding strains of hybrid seed, and more sophisticated machinery have resulted in a nine-fold increase in the quantity of crops produced. Hormones, antibiotics, and other chemical and organic substances have been mixed into livestock and poultry feed, substantially cutting maturation and production time.

One indication of the technological revolution in farming has been the substitution of capital items for labor. Production expenses have almost doubled between 1970 and 1976, reaching $81 billion. Also, farmers have become increasingly dependent on outside suppliers: in 1976, 72% of the production costs in farming were of non-farm origin.

The number of farms has continued to decline dramatically, falling 22% in the decade following 1964. Today's 2.4 million farmers employ only half the number of farm workers as did the farms of 1950, yet a worker's labor now feeds three times the number of people.* Less than 25% of these farms sell almost 90% of all agricultural products. The farms which account for the rest have sales less than $20,000 each. With average farm income at Depression levels, and total farm debt at a record $100 billion, the future is bleak for the majority of these smaller farms. If the current rate of decline in the number of farms continues, total farm production will be concentrated in about 100,000 farming units within several decades.

Agricultural Implements

The decline in farm employment and the increase in productivity is closely related to the sophistication and specialization of modern agricultural technology. Tractor horsepower, double the average per tractor of 1960, continues to rise. In 1965 only 2% of the tractors sold had greater than 100 horsepower. Today the figure has climbed to 30%. More powerful mechanical harvesters of increasing power have reduced harvest periods from ten weeks to two, and certain crops which were once labor-intensive, such as tomatoes and other vegetables, are now nearly fully mechanized.

Ten and a half billion dollars worth of agricultural equipment was sold by manufacturers in 1976, almost a four-fold increase in shipments since the early 1960's. The increase reflects both a price rise greater than that in the Wholesale Price Index for finished goods, and a growing volume of purchases, particularly overseas.[3] With shipments of more than $1 billion, tractors represent a quarter of the value of implements sold, followed by harvestors and equipment for planting, fertilizing, haying, spraying, dusting and picking.

While a growing variety of equipment is marketed by many companies, only seven firms are considered "full-line" producers. Most of the 1,400 manufacturers make less expensive, lighter and generally specialized machinery. Concentration among manufacturers was measured at four-firm control of 47% in 1972 (see Table III)*. Product line concentration is high, particularly in the machinery of largest sales volume. A recent report from the Council on Wage and Price Stability indicates that the seven full-line companies produce 90% of all tractors and combines.[4]

Since there is only limited room for expansion in the domestic market for farm machinery, the leading manufacturers are increasingly looking to the foreign market. Between 1968 and 1975, the three largest producers increased their international sales by an average of ten percentage points. One of the industry leaders, in fact, has 70% of its sales outside of North America.

Fertilizers

Fertilizer consists of primary nutrients often combined with fillers such as sand and clay. The primary nutrients are nitrogen, which is derived from anhydrous ammonia, in turn a derivative of natural gas; phosphate, from phosphatic rock; and potash, from potassic ores.

The United States is among the major fertilizer producers, the largest importer of potash, and the leading exporter of phosphatic fertilizers. The current consumption of 50 million tons of fertilizer a year represents 25% of the world's production. Since 1945, U.S. fertilizer consumption has increased three-fold, and primary nutrient use has increased five times over. Nitrogen accounts for the bulk of the nutrient increase—for every seven pounds used per acre three decades ago, 112 pounds are applied today.

The industry structure has changed over the past couple of decades as a result of the changing composition and form of fertilizers, the need to achieve economies of scale (particularly in the production of nitrogen-based fertilizer), and the rising level of integration between the raw material producers and the fertilizer blenders. Twenty-five years ago, fertilizer production had three distinct phases. Most primary nutrient materials were sold to fertilizer mixer/wholesalers by nitrogen, potash and superphosphate producers. The mixer/wholesalers were involved in simple dry-mixing of ungranulated materials, and as wholesalers they provided storage facilities and credit extension. A large number of retail outlets and farmers' cooperatives sold the fertilizers to consumers, usually in bag form.

* Mechanization has, of course, considerably increased the productivity of U.S. agriculture per field worker. This increase, however, is much smaller when measured against the total work force engaged in farm production and its related industries of inputs, food processing and distribution.

* The Department of Commerce issues a cinquennial report on concentration ratios in manufacturing, which measures the percent of manufacturers' shipments accounted for by the leading four, eight, twenty and fifty manufacturers. The figures are classified by the Standard Industrial Classification system (SIC), which groups economic activity by categories ranging from two-digit to seven-digit numbers. Concentration ratios are calculated only for four and five-digit classifications. For further explanation, see the Standard Industrial Classification Manual, 1972, Executive Office of the President, Office of Management and Budget, Washington, DC: U.S. Government Printing Office.

In the 1950's, manufacturers' bulk blending plants began to serve both as mixers and retailers. Today, integrated firms haul primary nutrient materials by barge, railroad, truck and pipeline to more than 5,000 decentralized bulk blending plants. The mixer/wholesalers' position has been eliminated, and the major producers now provide storage and credit services.

While farmers' cooperatives are assuming a leading role as manufacturers, integrated fertilizer production of all three nutrients is still largely dominated by the petrochemical companies. These companies integrated forward to the retail level in order to secure reliable markets, and then diversified into other primary nutrient production areas.

Concentration in 1972 was measured at the four-firm control of 35% of the nitrogen fertilizers, and 29% of the phosphatic fertilizers. The mining and manufacture of the basic materials is controlled by fewer companies, however. A recent study by the USDA shows that in 1976, four companies accounted for 50% of phosphate rock production capacity, and for 56% of potash capacity. The study also shows that diversification among leading basic materials producers is substantial. Eighty-six percent of phosphate rock production capacity, for instance, is controlled by potash and anhydrous ammonia producers.[5]

Exports have played a major role in fertilizer marketing, averaging about 10% of production during the 1960's. Exports shot up during the 1970's when world market fertilizer was not subject to U.S. price controls. About 20% of the $6.9 billion of manufacturers' shipments in 1975 went to export markets, of which 8% was U.S. government-funded.

Pesticides

More than half the pesticides produced today are herbicides, a third are insecticides, and the remainder, mostly fungicides. Pesticides are used to kill or control weeds, insects, fungus, rodents, and other living organisms which interfere with the growth of crops or farm animals.

Most domestic plant and insect control today is through the use of synthetic organic toxicants and formulated pesticides. Widespread application of these chemicals is relatively recent. DDT was developed during the second World War, and since then an estimated 50,000 pesticide mixtures of synthetic organic compounds have been introduced. Pesticide production has doubled in volume output since 1960. Annual production of one and a half billion pounds means over two billion dollars in manufacturers' shipments.

Chemical pesticide production has two stages: the manufacture of raw materials and, as not many basic toxicants are used alone, their subsequent blending or formulation into spray, powder, dust or solution form. Production of basic toxicants is dominated by the major chemical companies. Most of these firms have integrated forward into pesticide formulation; formulators who are not producers are disappearing, along with independent wholesalers and distributors.

Formulated pesticides had a 1975 volume of shipments estimated at $2.3 billion, up from $600 million in 1963. About 13% of this represents a formulation used in households, and the remainder is for agricultural and commercial purposes.

Overall concentration among formulated agricultural chemical producers was estimated at four-firm control of 39% in 1972, with four companies accounting for 48% of insecticides, and four for 77% of the herbicidal preparations.

Exports account for approximately 15% of formulated pesticide shipments. As agricultural chemicals for the export market are not subject to the same regulations and restrictions as those distributed in the domestic market, DDT and other agrichemicals banned for domestic use are still produced for export.

Feed

The livestock and poultry feed industry differs substantially from other input areas, as most of its raw materials are farm-produced. Animal feed represents a major market for corn, sorghum, oats, soybeans, and barley feed grains. These feed grains (not including soybeans) make up one out of every three crop acres of U.S. farms.

Prior to World War II, the commercial feed industry was relatively small, serving primarily as a distributive mechanism for moving feed into grain-deficient areas, and marketing byproduct feeds to millers. Feed use has increased steadily as consumption of grain-fed cattle has grown; and in the three decades following 1940, manufacturers' shipments of prepared feed rose by more than ten-fold, to more than $7 billion in 1975.

Feed mixing has become a sophisticated science, and there are hundreds of standard formulas produced today. In addition to basic feed grains, other bulk and protein substances are blended into feed, such as micronutrients, molasses, fish products, and soybean meals. Feed supplements such as vitamin concentrates, synthetic amino acids, hormones, and antibiotics have been developed by the drug and chemical industries to promote growth, increase water retention, improve tenderness, protect animal health, and increase shelf life.

As a result, an increasing proportion of feed grains are moving through commercial channels rather than being consumed directly on the farm. More than three-fifths of farm feed grains are processed by off-farm manufacturers, as opposed to 25% several decades ago. The major processors obtain about 75% of their feed grains directly from country elevators and cooperatives, and about 25% through the futures trading market. Few manufacturers are engaged in direct feed grain production themselves.

The number of companies engaged in feed production has decreased since 1954, and today there are about 1,500 producers. The majority of these are local manufacturers serving a limited area. Concentration is relatively low, with the leading four firms in 1972 accounting for 23% of shipments; regional and local concentration, however, is estimated to be much higher. Retail distribution and some local blending occurs through co-ops, independent and franchised distribution networks.

Most of the major formula feed producers are food processors in related lines of business. The level of integration between feed companies, poultry hatcheries, and processing firms has increased greatly since 1950. Broilers and turkeys, grown under direct production by many feed companies during the 1960's, are today grown under contract. Industry leaders are not generally integrated into beef production, but cattle feedlots often have their own grain storage and feed blending facilities, or contract with major producers for their supply.

Exports today account for about one quarter of all U.S.-produced feed grains, representing nearly 60% of the world trade in feed. A particular surge occurred during the early 1970's, when feed grain exports rose from 27 million tons in 1971 to 55 million tons in 1975.

PROCESSING

Food and tobacco processing represents the largest area of U.S. manufacturing activity, measured by value of shipments. Nearly all food and fiber products leaving the farm are processed, and manufacturers today provide about 90% of the 10,000 food items carried by the average supermarket. The remaining 10% consists of fresh produce, fresh fish, and products baked on the store premises.

Manufacturers produce more than $175 billion in food and tobacco products for wholesale, retail and institutional markets, three times the value in 1958. This growth is partly in response to the three-fold increase in the median family income since 1950. While food consumption is considered to have an inelastic demand, as the absolute quantity of food consumed by an individual cannot change greatly, the composition of the consumer's diet can vary substantially. There has in fact been a tendency for consumers to eat more meat and highly processed foodstuffs, and fewer cereals and starches.

In addition, the rising number of women in the workforce has resulted in more food preparation taking place outside the home, as reflected by increased consumption at public eating places, and in a vast new array of pre-assembled foods requiring only minimal preparation.

The vast surpluses which resulted from the changing methods in agricultural production, particularly the abundance of grains, provided a stimulus to processors to find new means for preserving and utilizing farm produce. Grain surpluses found a domestic market in grain-fed cattle, and perishable produce has been canned, frozen, and mixed into convenience food preparations.

Americans today consume a greater amount and a wider variety of processed foods than do people in any other country, and their diet is substantially different from that of a quarter century ago. Per capita beef consumption, for instance, has doubled to 129 pounds, while egg consumption has declined 30%. Fluid milk intake has decreased by a third, while consumption of cheese and other processed dairy products has doubled. Fresh vegetable consumption has declined by more than 10%, while frozen food production has increased 18-fold.

A discussion of the individual processing industries is beyond the scope of this introduction, but an examination of sector-wide trends provides an indication of the structure of individual industries. The growth of the sector is inseparable from the expansion of individual companies and recent developments in the marketing and promotion of processed foods, profoundly affecting the lifestyle of Americans and people around the world.

Structure

Although the quantity and value of processed foods has grown, the number of companies and their manufacturing establishments has decreased substantially. In 1947 there were more than 40,000 food manufacturing companies; in 1974, 22,000. The bulk of the decline has occurred since 1962, in a period with an average annual exodus rate of 3.2% At this rate, the number of food processors will have fallen to 11,000 by 1985.[6]

This decline in numbers has been experienced in nearly every processing industry. The number of baking companies and soft drink manufacturers, for instance, has diminished by nearly 50% since 1954; companies processing butter have declined by more than 80% (see Table III). The number of plants has also decreased, most notably in dairy and baking. As companies have sought economies of scale in manufacturing, plant size and shipment volume per plant has grown. Today, food processing plants are among the largest establishments in manufacturing. The average value of shipments from food plants in 1972 was 85% greater than the plant average for all other manufacturing industries.[7]

The decline in the number of firms is due largely to a major acquisition and merger movement in the post World War II period. Mergers and consolidations have been used historically in the processing sector to advance the position of individual companies, although these mergers have been characterized by different phases. In the late 1800's and early 1900's, horizontal mergers were predominant, particularly in milling, baking, vegetable and fruit packing, and dairy. These acquisitions of other manufacturers of similar products were motivated not only by economies of scale in purchasing, production, management or distribution, but also by a desire for product monopolization.

Between 1920 and 1940, the sector saw an expansion of vertical merger activity when large firms bought out their suppliers and purchasers in order to decrease their dependency on input providers, and to guarantee market outlets. While this trend has continued, mergers of a diversified nature have been dominant since the 1940's. Companies have spread their food operations over a number of different industries, and have sought higher profitability in growth areas of agribusiness such as restaurants and snack foods. There have also been numerous acquisitions which have expanded the geographic market of the acquiring company.

A disproportionate number of acquisitions during this recent period have been made by the largest food manufacturers, as noted by the Federal Trade Commission in its 1966 study, The Structure of Food Manufacturing. The study showed that between 1947 and 1964, the number of categories in which the 50 largest processors manufactured food increased from an average of five to an average of nine.* These companies grew at a rate 53% higher than the overall sector average. The top 25 companies alone moved into a total of 108 new food manufacturing categories, 88% of which occurred through acquisition. The acquired firms were typically large, often occupying a leading position in the industry.[8]

The FTC study has not been updated in full, but it is clear that expansion through acquisition is continuing. Since 1965, the number of food manufacturing mergers has increased both absolutely and as a percentage of all manufacturing acquisitions. Between 1948 and 1965, food company acquisitions averaged about 8% of all manufacturing acquisitions; since 1969 they have averaged more than 13%.[9]

A notable exception to company expansion in food manufacturing is the meatpackers, whose history is unique in the processing sector. Meatpackers were the first to organize their operations on a national scale. Centered at the juncture of the railroad lines between the cattle-producing midwest and the east coast market, the Chicago-based packers gained a strong footing in wide-scale food distribution toward the end of the 19th century. The packers' increasing monopoly growth was halted by the FTC's Packer's Consent Decree of 1920, in which the four industry giants were forced to dispose of many of their stockyards, terminals, warehouses, and retail stores, and were prohibited from diversifying into other food processing industries.

The restrictions of the decree, and the rise of more flexible transportation modes like trucking, prevented the old packers from maintaining their monopoly position and led to a geographic redistribution of the meatpacking industry. Unlike other industries, the number of packers continued to increase until 1963, when a decline began. Several of the major packers have since been bought up by conglomerate food and non-food companies, and have been integrated into a powerful new market force.

Concentration

The mergers of the past two decades have had a greater impact on the overall concentration within the sector than within individual industries, as most of the mergers were acquisitions made in processing areas other than those of the acquiring firm. As a result, fewer and fewer companies have come to account for a growing proportion of shipments, assets, and valued-added within the sector. The FTC found that as early as 1963, only 50 companies accounted for three-eighths of the total food manufacturing value added, and 60% of the processing profits.[10] Processors' expansion since that year indicates that their share has increased. Furthermore, the 50 largest processors' control of total food processing assets has grown from 41% in 1950 to 56% in 1974.[11]

Table III shows the four-firm concentration levels calculated by the Department of Commerce on the basis of manufacturers' shipments.* While certain industries have declined in concentration, the average four-firm ratio has increased from 47% in 1958 to 52% in 1972.[12] Twenty-nine categories have four-firm concentration of 50% or greater, representing about a quarter of the sector's value of shipments. If meatpackers' shipments are subtracted, the value of shipments under four-firm concentration greater than 50% increases to a third.

Concentration varies notably between food processing categories, but industry structure must be taken into account when examining concentration data. For instance, one of the least concentrated industries appears to be bottled and canned soft drinks, with four-firm control of only 14%. However, 66% of the manufacture of syrups and flavorings is controlled by the four largest companies. These companies franchise the bottling and canning rights to hundreds of decentralized bottlers around the country. Such a method substantially reduces transportation costs, but suggests a degree of control by the syrup manufacturers higher than that reflected in the statistics.

Furthermore, concentration in many of these industries by definition occurs at a local or regional level. The four largest meatpacking plants control only 26% of the total shipments in the U.S. cattle market. However, in the 25 states which provide nearly all of the U.S. grain-fed cattle, the four largest companies control an average of 62%. In some states the figure is as great as 78%.[13] Higher regional concentration also holds true for baking and dairy products.

Concentration is much higher by product line within each industry. Although four firms control only 20% of canned fruits and vegetables, within this category four control 56% of catsup and other tomato sauces, 35% of canned vegetables, and 35% of canned fruits. Four firms account for 42% of the "frozen specialties" but control 58% of the frozen dinner and similar convenience foods, and 51% of the frozen pies and desserts.[14]*

Finally, these figures do not indicated the sector-wide position of the major processors, as companies occupying the leading position are not identified. The 1966 FTC study found that only 50 companies occupy the leading position in 70% of the food processing categories.

Integration

Processors are heavily dependent on inputs from other sectors of the economy. With every dollar of output representing about 20¢ for raw farm products, and 15¢ for partially-processed products, 10¢ for containers and packaging, and 6¢ for trade and transportation services for purchased inputs, there has been considerable motivation to integrate operations so as to minimize costs.

In order to guarantee a stable and reliable source of farm produce, processors have vertically integrated into farm production, through both direct ownership and contractual arrangements with farmers. Under a forward contract, a farmer agrees to plant a certain amount of a specified crop to be delivered by a certain date. The company determines the production technique, supplies the seed, often provides short-term credit, and generally controls the produce grading which determines the final price scale.

* The 46 food and tobacco processing categories here vary slightly from the classification of the Department of Commerce. "Animal feed" is placed under Inputs, and non-edible oil products and small industries such as "manufactured ice" are excluded.

* See Ranking Charts I-XVIII.

Contracting is already the dominant form of production in select commodities, however. Ninety-eight percent of all sugar beets, 55% of citrus fruits, and 95% of sweet corn and tomatoes are produced under contract arrangements. Processors themselves produce 10% of the vegetables for processing, with an additional 85% under contract (see Table IV).

Contract production is projected as the primary production method for the future. The American Agricultural Marketing Association has estimated that by 1985, 75% of all food production will be integrated, mostly through contracting.[15] This is an attractive method to processors, as few production risks are assumed by the company, and it represents a trend away from domestic corporate farming which was a popular form of integration during the late 1950's and early 1960's.*

Marketing and Technology

Food processors annually introduce more than 7,000 new products or variations, although fewer than half ever reach the supermarket shelf. The bulk of the product changes have been in size, packaging appearance or material, and flavoring. The pace of product introduction has slowed down in the past five years, since many companies are relying on diversifying their operations out of processing, rather than expanding the scope of products within their food operations.

Unlike many manufacturing areas, the recent expansion of the processing sector has not been accompanied by the use of innovative technology. Many of the basic methods of food preservation are essentially the same today as decades ago. Most processes for milling, baking, canning, brewing, distilling and other areas have been around for a century or more, although production time has been shortened through the introduction of more sophisticated equipment.

This is not to say that processing has not been technologically innovative, however. Several of the major processors trace their origins to the introduction of a unique product, such as carbonated beverages or cold breakfast cereals, or to the development of a new preservation process, such as condensing soup or canning milk. More recently, companies engaged primarily in the manufacture of chemicals have introduced such innovations as protein supplements, meat analogs, synthetic food components like flavorings and sweeteners, vacuum concentration, essence recovery, and freeze-drying.

Food processing has one of the lowest proportions of expenditures on research and development of all industrial sectors. In 1969 it represented only .4% of overall sales. The research and development that does occur is oriented primarily to consumer appeal, and is in the hands of a few large firms. As early as 1965 it was calculated that nearly 70% of all food research and development was conducted by the 20 largest firms.[16]

At the same time, food processors are among the highest advertisers in proportion to their sales. About four billion dollars was spent on advertising and promotional expenses in 1976, a ten-fold increase since 1960. Advertising expenditures vary between industries, generally reflecting the degree of "product differentiation" between similar products. The function of a processor's advertising is to persuade the consumer of real or perceived differences between its products and the substitutes of its competitors. Refined sugar, for instance, looks pretty much the same when the package is removed, and the variation in quality is generally not discernible. Advertising expenditures are as low as .3% of industry sales. On the other hand, soft drinks, candy, and baked goods such as cookies and crackers are highly advertised, and expenses are as high as 3.2% for confectionery, and 2.6% for canned convenience foods such as stews and other entrée dishes.[17]

Most of this advertising is done by a handful of companies within each industry, and expenses for the leading companies can be as high as 10% of sales. The National Commission on Food Marketing found that the largest 20 companies in 1964 accounted for 44% of food industry advertising, and the 50 largest were estimated to account for more than 80%. Within each industry the top four companies averaged 80% of the advertising.[18]

The increased consumption of private label products sold by supermarkets has cut into the rate of return processors receive on their advertising expenditures. Although supermarket chains do some food manufacturing – estimated at about 8% of their sales – processors supply the bulk of the private label products. While this limits the competition from retailers' own manufacturing, private label products provide greater negotiating leverage to the retailer. The chain is able to switch processors for an identically-packaged product without the consumers' knowledge. Supermarkets contract mainly with the larger processors, whose brand names will be in demand due to advertising, but the retailer's brand competes on the basis of price. Profits are lower in private label contracts than on brand name items.

DISTRIBUTION

American consumers spent $205 billion on food in 1976, consisting of $153 billion in purchases at retail grocery stores, and $52 billion for away-from-home consumption at restaurants, cafeterias, and other eating and drinking places. This food arrived at the purchase place through a complex network of distributors, which includes processors, wholesalers, food brokers, warehousers, transporters, food service distributors, and importers.

The structure of food distribution, like other agribusiness sectors, has been altered in response to changes in income, consumption, and demographic patterns, and the organization of food processing. Most notable is the increasing share of sales by large supermarket chains, the decline of independently-operated grocery stores, the rapid growth of away-from-home food preparation and consumption, and the growth of food service contractors.

These changes have brought about a new relationship among the food marketing agencies themselves, and between food distribution and the overall agribusiness system. Three decades ago, the consumer dollar spent on food grown on U.S. farms represented approximately 50¢ payment to farmers, 21¢ to food processors, 7.5¢ to wholesalers, 11¢ to retailers, and 10.5¢ to restaurants. Today, that dollar is divided into 32.5¢ to the farmer, 19¢ to the processor, 10¢ to the wholesaler, 18¢ to the retailer, 15¢ to restaurants, and 5.5¢ to transportation.* While these figures do not include non-U.S. farm food, they give a clear indication that the marketing sector is playing an increasingly important role in our food system (see Table V).

* This is not to deny the importance of direct corporate farming. In certain states such as California, Hawaii and Florida, direct production accounts for a substantial proportion of crop production. Information on corporate land use, however, is extremely difficult to obtain, and many corporations own land for tax purposes rather than for direct farming.

Wholesale

Wholesaling has long been an integral part of food distribution but, until recently, the scale of operations has been limited to a specialized product line, or narrow geographical area. Three types of wholesalers warehouse and distribute goods for resale to retail outlets or other wholesalers: the broker, handling almost 20% of the $120 billion wholesale trade in food, beverages and tobacco; processors, which wholesale their own goods, or are diversified into distribution operations, with another 20%; and wholesale firms, representing 60% of revenues. Unlike the wholesale firms, food brokers do not take possession of the foodstuffs they handle, serving instead as a marketing agent between the producer/manufacturer, retailers, and other wholesale firms. Therefore brokers are not included in this study.

Most wholesaling is still conducted on a small scale. In 1972 there were 37,000 firms with food wholesale operations. The vast majority of these had revenues of less than one million dollars (see Table VI). Close to 90% of the wholesalers are "specialty line," handling a limited group of products, and account for more than 60% of the total wholesale volume.

However, the $50 billion area of "general line" grocery distribution is becoming increasingly dominated by large, highly sophisticated wholesale firms with region-wide operations. These wholesalers, together with the major retail chains, control most of the nation's 2,000 automated distribution centers which supply most of the products sold by the 180,000 grocery stores. Since these centers have a storage capacity as great as 13 million cubic feet, owning a dozen or so enables a large wholesaler to keep up with the rapid turnover of food on the retail level.

General-line grocery wholesalers primarily service the 135,000 independent grocery stores. The number of independent stores has declined by two-thirds since 1940, and independents not affiliated with a wholesaler have made up the bulk of the decline. Most independents have been unable to compete with the economies of scale in purchasing, warehousing and retailing food achieved by the large supermarket chains. However, independents affiliated with a wholesaler now receive services beyond the bulk purchase and distribution function. Merchandising, advertising, inventory and accounting, insurance, credit, and even the cosigning of leases are common services of major wholesalers, and are often cited as the main reason for the independents' survival. Today, about half the independents are affiliated in cooperatively-owned wholesale firms, or with "voluntary" firms which service their membership. Affiliated independents purchase about 60% of their products through a single wholesaler.

Concentration has increased notably over the past three decades among the general line grocery distributors. The eight largest wholesalers serving voluntary membership, together with the eight largest cooperatively-owned wholesalers accounted for a third of all general line wholesale grocery sales in 1972, a four-fold increase since 1948. [19] A more recent study by the American Institute of Food Distribution indicates that only 25 wholesalers account for 42% of the nation's general line grocery distribution. [20]

Data are not available for concentration in sales on a regional basis, but as most major wholesalers are limited to a dozen or so states, their share of regional wholesale volume is likely greater than at a national level.

A number of major wholesale firms have integrated forward to retail store operations or restaurant chains, and many have broadened the range of products they handle to include nonfood items such as appliances and toiletries. A few wholesalers have integrated backward into food processing, but their output is still relatively small.

Retail

American consumers bought more than $153 billion worth of food at retail stores in 1976. Three-quarters of these sales were made at supermarkets (stores with sales greater than one million dollars), up from a third in 1954. The majority of these supermarkets are owned by chains, which are operators of 11 or more stores.

The chain supermarket has been around for more than a century, and by 1950 had come to account for 35% of all grocery sales (independent stores accounted for the rest). As the chains' storage and distribution networks became more sophisticated in the postwar period, they were able to increase their share of sales to 47% by 1976, almost evenly dividing grocery sales with the independent stores (see Table VIII).

Many of the smaller independent stores have been replaced by another sort of chain known as convenience stores. These self-service stores average 2500 square feet in size, with annual sales of $250,000, and they now account for 5% of grocery sales. Beer and cigarette sales generally account for a quarter of these stores' activity. Their numbers have grown from a few thousand in 1960 to approximately 27,000, of which 6,000 belong to the leading chain.

Concentration among the 20 largest supermarket chains has increased in the last quarter century, from 27% of all grocery sales in 1948 to 37% in 1975. The increase is largely due to a merger movement among retailers, which peaked during 1950-1966. In the quarter century

* Transportation was not calculated separately prior to 1958. The U.S. Department of Agriculture estimates this domestic "marketing bill" for U.S. farm food only, which retailed at $172 billion in 1976. Additional food items not grown on U.S. farms, such as coffee, fish, and a certain proportion of sugar, represent approximately $30 billion in additional sales.

 Affiliated stores may be cooperative retailers, which are stockholding members of a cooperative wholesale buying group, or voluntary group retailers, which belong to voluntary merchandising groups sponsored by wholesalers. Both types of affiliated stores generally operate under a common name. An independent grocery store, as opposed to a chain, is an operator of 10 or less stores. Through wholesaler affiliation there might be hundreds of stores operating under a common name which might not be under common ownership.

following World War II, over 1,000 retail firm acquisitions were made, 32% by the leading 20 companies. Since 1967, however, a ruling by the Federal Trade Commission has slowed the pace of concentration through restrictions governing geographic expansion. [21]

Concentration at a national level is not truly indicative of market share, as chains actually compete at a local and regional level. Market share figures, calculated by the Department of Commerce in terms of Standard Metropolitan Statistical Areas (SMSAs), show that the leading four retailers in over two-thirds of the metropolitan areas controlled an average of 52.1% of sales in 1972. In 1954, the average had been 45%. In addition, the number of highly concentrated markets—where four firms make over 60% of sales—had increased from 5% of the number of SMSAs to 25%. [22]

Supermarket sales have not expanded to match the rise in overall food expenditures. During most of the 1960's, away-from-home consumption increased at a rate greater than 5.5%, while food sales through retail stores increased by only 2.5%. To win back sales from restaurants and fast food chains, supermarket operators have pursued several strategies. More than 80% of the large chains have installed take-out delicatessens and bakeries, and a number offer restaurant services. Chains are also increasing the scope of the products they retail. Higher profitability has encouraged the selling of utensils, clothing, appliances, and other nonfood items. Approximately 8% of retail sales are in nonfood items. [23]

In addition, following a long period of acquisition or construction of new units, a number of chain supermarkets have been shut down in recent years as part of a major movement of consolidation and reorganization. With geographic expansion limited by the FTC, chains are now opening fewer but larger and more diversified stores. The average new store is 30,000 square feet, compared with 20,000 a decade ago. "Superstores"—with sales greater than four million dollars—account for a fifth of all supermarket sales, but are only 3% of the supermarket stores. These large "one-stop" stores are increasing in number, and today some joint drug-and-food stores average 50,000 square feet.

Restaurants

Food preparation is moving outside of the home, as most clearly evidenced by the food service industry. Estimated by many as the third largest consumer industry, behind retail food and automotive sales, public eating places, together with mass-market feeding services at the workplace and such institutions as schools, have combined revenues of more than $80 billion. The food service industry is the biggest employer of all consumer industries, with over four million persons on its payroll.

The largest area of food service is the public eating and drinking places, which had sales of $52 billion in 1976. Most of these sales were made by family-style restaurants, bars, luxury restaurants, and the thousands of independently operated diners and cafes; the fast food chains, however, did account for more than $14 billion.

In the past decade, the rapid growth in the number of fast food units has been striking. The industry is about 20 years old, but its growth has come in recent years. In 1970 there were 32,500 domestic units with total sales of $4.6 billion. Today there are at least 53,000 units with four times the sales (see Table VII).

The majority of these restaurant units are organized on a franchise basis, in which the operator pays the company a fee, usually in a single sum when the operations are contracted. In addition, franchisees pay yearly royalty fees of a certain percentage of sales—usually 4-5%. Some companies lease the real estate occupied by the franchised restaurant; others lease only the name and services. Often the franchiser provides food, equipment, and accounting services to the operator, although legally the franchiser is prohibited from requiring food purchases.

Franchised units still outnumber company-owned restaurants three to one, although the trend since 1970 has been for companies to buy back franchised operations. The franchises which are granted today are going to existing franchisees or to other restaurant companies. The high cost of setting up a franchise operation—estimated at more than $200,000 for the building, equipment, and fee—prevents most individuals from establishing franchises. Furthermore, company-operated units have been found to be more profitable than franchised units. Today these units make about a third of the fast food sales, up from a quarter of the sales in 1970 (see Table VII).

Concentration among fast food restaurants is occuring on two levels. Geographically, 30% of the fast food units are located in four states: California, Texas, Ohio, and Florida. Ten percent of the units are in California alone. Additionally, concentration in number of units and share of sales is high. Seven companies, each with more than 1000 owned and franchised units, were responsible for 45% of the restaurant units, and 45.8% of the sales, in 1975. [24] The industry leader alone is estimated to have 20% of the market.

Fast food has clearly been a high growth area, and numerous food and beverage manufacturers have acquired restaurants in the past decade. Seven of the top 20 chains are operated by diversified processors, and acquisitions appear to be increasing. Restaurants are a major market for food processors, particularly in light of their growth rate which outpaces retailers. However, it is difficult to measure the degree of intra-company transfers between food processors and the restaurants they own.

With a relatively stable population, and projections of a decreasing proportion of young people to the overall population, numerous questions have been raised regarding the level of market saturation reached by fast food outlets. However, the chains have been both diversifying their menus (adding breakfast or desserts) and seeking new markets. Contract arrangements in such places as bus terminals and through publicly-funded school lunch programs have offered new domestic markets. Overseas expansion, however, has been the fastest growing market. In just the four years between 1971 and 1975, the number of international fast food restaurant units jumped from 930 to 2,384, with a more than six-fold increase in the United Kingdom, and a ten-fold increase in Asia. [25]

Food Service Provision

Food provision services to large-scale, institutional markets constitutes one of the most recently organized areas of food distribution. Supplying meals at the workplace, health-care institutions, educational establishments, and providing prepared foods to restaurants and airlines constitutes the more than $30 billion market. The purchasing and preparation operations of these establishments have traditionally been handled by the institutions themselves or, in the case of the workplace, by local cafeterias and the home.

Food service has traditionally been an atomized industry, with the average operator owning a few trucks and doing about $4 million in annual business. But large-scale accounts, such as major restaurant corporations and publicly-funded institutions, have prompted regional and full-line services. A handful of major companies, formed as the result of mergers and internal growth out of the 3,500 firms in the industry, are playing an increasingly important role in organizing the markets.

Contract meal provision has penetrated only a segment of the many institutions, but some companies now boast of making 40,000 meals in a single city each day. Best organized are the at-work facilities, estimated at more than $12 billion in annual revenues, about 75% of which are covered by contract arrangements. The shift of plants and headquarters away from urban areas, the growing levels of automation, and time considerations have created a demand for fast, on-site service. Universities and colleges are presently 50% under contract, health-care facilities 15%, and grade schools 5%, although the latter is growing due to government contracts for federally-funded lunch programs. Other markets include government and military installations (covered about 20%), recreational facilities such as stadiums (about 30%), restaurants and airlines.

While the food service leaders are few and still relatively small—perhaps a dozen have revenues greater than $100 million—they continue to grow through acquisition, expand geographically, and integrate backward into food processing. In a decade, one industry executive estimates, five or six companies will dominate the industry. [26]

Numerous processors have food service operations, which range from "portion control" packaging for individual products such as ketchup or sugar, to provision contracts with restaurants. The two provision leaders, both with revenues greater than $600 million, are independent companies, but the major food processors occupy the three following positions.

An additional part of food service is the vending machine servicers, with about $10 billion in annual sales. Although the number of vending machines has stayed relatively constant in the past decade, at about five million, sales have more than doubled. This is due to variations in location and product selection as well as inflation. Beverages and cigarettes still account for more than half of all vending machine sales. A number of vending companies have restaurant supply and food provision services.

INTERNATIONAL OPERATIONS

This study is concerned primarily with the structure of the domestic food system. No discussion of agribusiness, however, would be complete without mention of the role of the overseas market and the trends in international operations of the major companies. Many of the production and consumption changes discussed in the preceding pages have taken hold in non-industrialized countries around the world, largely through investments by U.S., European and Japanese companies.

Major U.S. agribusiness companies have been instrumental in introducing or encouraging new techniques in food production. By using such methods as the Green Revolution and contract production—techniques not restricted to companies based in the United States—they have helped to transform the means by which food is produced around the world. The development and active promotion of the methods of production associated with the Green Revolution has provided important outlets in developing countries for U.S.-produced farm inputs. The new strains of hybrid seed developed in the 1950's brought about tremendous leaps in agricultural productivity, but only when used with a body of technological inputs not generally available in the developing countries. Controlled irrigation systems, chemical fertilizers, heavy doses of pesticides, advanced agricultural machinery, and improved storage and distribution networks were needed to realize the productivity promised by the Green Revolution. While the benefits of these advanced production techniques reached only a small proportion of farmers in the developing countries, the popularity of such techniques continued until the dramatic increase in the price of fuel and input materials in 1973. The severe drawbacks of this energy-intensive mode of agriculture then became apparent.

Equally important are the actual farming operations of foreign companies in these countries. Historically, U.S. companies have engaged in foreign agricultural production, primarily for export to the industrialized nations. By the end of the 19th century, plantations growing sugar in the Caribbean, tropical fruits in Central America, and coffee and spices in Latin America, had succeeded in directly and indirectly integrating local farmers into export-oriented production. Agriculture was the second largest area of foreign investment, second only to mining, in the early 1900's.[27] At the same time, food processing facilities, particularly in meat, began to get a footing in foreign soil, although the number of foreign subsidiaries was quite small.

Plantation production still produces a substantial part of the cash crops imported to the United States, but its modernization is creating new forms of organization. Faced with a high degree of nationalistic sentiment and the threat of possible expropriation, and eager to minimize the risks involved in growing food, many companies have chosen to supplement, or replace, direct production for contracts with local farmers. The arrangement is similar to that in the United States. Farmers are provided with start-up loans and technical assistance, and the company, in turn, has the option of buying all the produce which meets its specifications.

At the same time, the composition of U.S. farm imports is changing. In addition to traditional cash crops,

AGRICULTURAL EXPORTS

The United States is the world's leading agricultural exporter, accounting for close to one-sixth of the world trade in agricultural goods, and more than half of the world's grain trade. The U.S. government played an active role in cultivating foreign markets for agricultural products during the 1950's, but the share of federally-administered agricultural trade has since declined substantially. Exports grew from approximately $3.2 billion in 1955 with two-thirds financed through government programs, to $9.4 billion in 1972 with nearly 90% outside of government programs. A confluence of factors ranging from weather to manipulation of supplies and currency devaluation pushed 1973 exports to $17.7 billion. Since then they have held close to $22 billion each year.

Grain, feed and soybean products account for three-quarter of these exports. More than half of U.S. wheat production is channeled into the export market, primarily to the developing countries. A third of soybean and a quarter of corn production is marketed overseas, mostly to the developed countries.

A number of companies, including farmers' cooperatives, have grain export operations, but world grain trade is dominated by a small number of U.S. and foreign firms. Because these firms are, for the most part, private, the public has little access to information on their operations. However, June 1975 hearings before the Senate Subcommittee on Multinational Corporations revealed that concentration in grain trade is exceedingly high. Between 1970 and 1975, six companies accounted for up to 96% of U.S. wheat exports, 95% of U.S. corn exports, 80% of Argentina's wheat exports, and 90% of the wheat and corn exported from the European community.*

* The six companies are: Cargill, Continental Grain, Cook Industries (most of its grain trading operations were sold to PILLSBURY in 1978), Bunge & Born, Garnac Grain and Louis Dreyfus. Multinational Corporations and United States Foreign Policy, Hearings before the Subcommittee on Multinational Corporations of the Committee on Foreign Relations, 94th Congress, 2nd Session on International Grain Companies, June 18, 23 and 24, 1976, Part 16, Washington, DC: U.S. Government Printing Office, p. 2.

fruit and vegetables are being imported to supplement, sometimes to the point of displacing, domestically-grown produce. In the last two decades, motivated by labor, tax, and regulatory considerations, a number of companies have moved their production operations to, or initiated new ones in, developing countries. A substantial portion of pineapple production, for instance, has been moved from Hawaii to the Philippines, and mushrooms sold in the United States are now produced in Taiwan. Almost 60% of the vegetables Americans eat between December and May now come from Mexico.

American corporations are now contract growing and processing produce, meat and other products for sale in the foreign country market as well as for export to the United States. Although the market there is still relatively small, it is growing at a faster pace in many product areas than the market at home.

Direct foreign investments in processing prior to World War II were minimal. With the exception of certain companies engaged in grain milling or in the manufacture of unique products such as bottled beverages or canned milk, few companies had overseas subsidiaries engaged in processing for the local market. It was not until the 1950's when the socio-economic changes of income, labor and consumption patterns began to take hold that a viable market for the processed goods developed.

Since World War II, particularly since the early 1960's, direct investment in processing facilities abroad has skyrocketed. The domestic growth rate for many processors had begun to decline after more than a decade of postwar expansion; and limitations on domestic expansion, overseas processing appeared as an attractive and essential solution.

Between 1955 and 1968, U.S. corporations nearly tripled the number of their food processing subsidiaries abroad. According to a Harvard Business School study, 187 multinational companies' food subsidiaries grew from 250 in 1955 to 700 by 1968. More than 100 of these were in the grain mill products area, 90 in dairy, and 75 in both confectionery and beverages. In 1966, U.S. food companies abroad had invested nearly $4 billion in processing, 8% of the U.S. total foreign manufacturing assets. By 1970, this figure had grown 25%, to more than $5 billion. Sales grew accordingly, from $5 billion to $7.1 billion.[28] A more recent study of 120 leading processors and retailers estimated that in 1973, total foreign sales of these companies reached more than $15.6 billion. Foreign sales and assets of these companies averaged 25%.[29]

Overseas subsidiary operations, like those at home, have been formed primarily through acquisition rather than internal expansion. Processors have bought up local firms, bringing with them not so much a technological advantage, but the ability to employ marketing and promotion techniques found successful in the United States. Mass-scale advertising, coupons, samples, games and gimmicks have helped spread such products as snack and convenience foods, or infant formulas, to remote areas of the developing world.

Many of these operations have proved to be quite profitable, in some cases averaging a rate of profit 50% higher than the company's domestic return. For some food processors, international profits are as high as 25% of sales.[30] At the same time, they have been risky ventures, as increasing nationalism and demands for more equitable sharing of profits and technology have sometimes led to nationalization.

While overseas investment in agricultural production and manufacturing continues, certain agribusiness companies have recently preferred to shun direct investments in favor of assuming a consultative role to governments, national corporations, and large landowners. In this capacity, companies serve as designers of national agricultural development plans, marketers for a country's produce, or co-investors in joint ventures with local companies. Some firms see this management role as laying the basis for much larger and coordinated investments — in some cases, in the billion-dollar range — when they can be certain of the terms and the host country's receptivity. Other firms see such "technology transfer" as the most profitable strategy in the long run. Nationalistic sentiments in the host country, which in the past have resulted in legal restrictions or even expropriation, may be appeased through this new role, while longer-term development will create both a reliable source of produce for the processors, and a growing market for their output.[31]

1. The Department of Commerce determines company affiliation of establishments based on census reports and publicly available records. A company is defined as the total of the individual establishments under one ownership.
2. Value of Shipments represents the net selling value, f.o.b. plant, after discount and allowances, and excluding freight charges and excise taxes. Includes intra-company transfers.
3. Canned specialties represent such foods as baby foods, ethnic dishes, and non-seafood soups. Frozen specialties include such foods as frozen dinners and frozen pizza.
4. Data not completely comparable to 1972 figure due to changes in the category's definition.
5. Includes baking powder, yeast, peanut butter, spices, and other items not elsewhere classified.

NOTE: The 4, 8 and 20 firms are not necessarily identical between 1954 and 1972. Concentration figures for different product lines within one industry may not be added to derive an average for the industry as the same company may occupy a number of leading positions within several product lines.

1. Expenditures represent total annual U.S. farm food purchases by civilian consumers, including purchases in retail stores, restaurants, and other away-from-home eating places, plus the value of food served by hospitals, schools, and other institutions. Excluded are exported foods, and foods not grown on U.S. farms, such as coffee and seafood, as well as sales to the Armed Forces, on-farm consumption, and alcoholic beverages.

2. Farm value is the payment to farmers for the quantity of farm foods consumed by domestic consumers.

3. The total marketing bill represents the difference between consumer expenditures and the farm value, and is an estimate of the costs and profits involved in processing, transporting and distributing U.S. farm foods between the farmer and consumer.

4. The marketing bill represents at each stage the difference between the cost of food of U.S.-farm origin, and the value of sales of the same food. Thus, the marketing bill for processors represents the subtraction of the cost of domestic farm-food raw materials from the manufacturers' value of shipments to civilian consumers.

5. Figures for the cost of transportation were not calculated separately prior to 1958. The transportation bill represents charges added to the value of manufacturers' shipments of finished products – from processor to wholesaler. The figures indicate the cost of intercity truck and rail transportation; air, water, and intracity truck transportation are accounted for in other marketing components.

List of Agribusiness Companies

The objective of this study is to identify and examine the leading companies in the industries which make up the U.S. agribusiness system. The industries selected were grouped within three relatively homogeneous agribusiness sectors: farm inputs, processing, and distribution (see Guide to Company Selection Categories).

In order to select the companies which represent a major force within each industry, the CDE developed criteria based on the 1976 U.S. revenues generated by company operations within each agribusiness industry. The cut-off points for these revenues were drawn up in consideration of the size of the industries, the level of industry concentration, and the average size of the companies. In order to insure that a representative population of companies would be selected, different cut-off points were assigned for each industry.

The CDE investigated more than 600 companies which were identified in agribusiness sector studies, such as trade journal rankings of the largest processors, surveys of wholesale, retail and convenience store operators, and company classifications in business directories. Numerous business publications were searched, and interviews with company executives and industry analysts were conducted.

The CDE also collected market share rankings by product line and industry, compiled by analysts and industry publications, in order to guarantee that the largest firms in each industry were represented (see Ranking Tables 1-18). Operators were consolidated by common parent in order to accurately reflect the controlling companies' market share. Farmers' cooperatives, private companies, and foreign corporations, often overlooked by industry studies, were also examined. The company selection process was further facilitated by the use of unpublished data on 400 food processors, compiled by the Wisconsin Food System Research Project,* and by the help of the Agricultural Data Center of Boston and Hank Frundt of the Interfaith Center on Corporate Responsibility.

These companies were then measured against the criteria indicated in the Guide to Company Selection Categories. The final CDE agribusiness list of 222 companies includes 157 U.S. public corporations, 28 farmers' and retailer-owned cooperatives, 21 U.S. private and tightly-held companies, and 16 foreign corporations. Foreign companies appear on the list when they hold a 40% or more interest in a U.S.-based operator which meets the CDE criteria.

* In October 1978 the Food System Research Group will publish the Directory of the 200 Largest Food and Tobacco Processing Companies, 1975, authored by John M. Connor and Loys Matager. It will be available through the Department of Agricultural Economics, University of Wisconsin, Madison, Wisconsin 53706.

The CDE agribusiness list is unique in several respects. First, it addresses three major sectors of agribusiness, providing a framework for a comprehensive view of this area of economic activity. Secondly, it examines the major companies involved in these sectors regardless of their ownership structure – public, private or cooperative – in order to identify the major interests and elements of economic control in the nation's food system.

While all the companies meet the CDE criteria, the difficulties encountered by the absence of any disclosure requirements governing private companies, and the irregularities in public corporate disclosure, present the possibility that certain companies have been overlooked. However, it is believed that the companies included in this study account for a major share, often more than 50%, of the markets of the industries examined.

CDE Agribusiness Master Chart

This Chart presents the U.S. operations of the 222 corporations selected for the Directory. Each firm's 1976 U.S. food and agribusiness sales are categorized according to 16 major industries, to the extent permitted by publicly available information.* It is, to our knowledge, the most comprehensive and detailed listing of the top agribusiness corporations.

The Comments section of the Master Chart identifies many of the specific product lines within each industry. No comment is made if a specific breakdown is not available. Each comment is keyed to the appropriate industry by a letter symbol, and, when possible, dollar amounts for product lines are given, e.g. "(C) feed $80 & seed $30." This section also identifies the largest operator in each industry and in several major product lines.

The comments also point out certain irregularities in company reporting. In a few cases which are noted, federal and state excise taxes on liquor, wine, beer and tobacco are not reported separately and are therefore included in the sales figures. Often, company reports do not break out small non-food operations. Such items as trucking operations or sales of drug store products are identified in the comments by "non-food." "Miscellaneous" refers to small food and agribusiness sales that belong in another industry but cannot be broken out.

The data for the Master Chart was collected primarily from Annual Reports and 10-K filings, as well as other company releases, for fiscal years ending between July 1, 1976 and June 30, 1977. Because of the totally inadequate reporting by many companies, these documents often reveal only total food and agribusiness sales or total sector figures. In such cases industry breakdowns had to be obtained from other sources, including telephone interviews and written reports from company stock analysts, trade publications, standard reference sources, and newspaper and periodical clippings. Some industry figures are therefore estimates and the addition of these estimates may not always exactly conform to the total disclosed by the company.

* The Chart reports external product sales only, excluding all intra-company transactions and internal processing and handling of goods. These sales figures cannot be used to make a comparison between the size of a company in the distribution sector and a company engaged in processing or inputs manufacturing. The figures for distribution are inflated as they incorporate the value of the manufactured goods and do not merely reflect the value of the distribution service.

Table I and II, based on data from the Master Chart, indicate the degree of company concentration in agribusiness as well as individual sectors. Forty-two companies, each with more than $1.6 billion in agribusiness revenues, and representing only 19% of all the companies in the Chart, had 50% of all agribusiness revenues (i.e. 81% of the companies had only 50%). The companies from the same revenue range also dominated the individual sectors. On the average a quarter of the firms had just over half the revenues in each sector.

Moreover, of all the revenue ranges listed, companies with sales of more than $1.6 but less than $2.5 billion proved to be the most diversified. Of the 26 companies in this category, 12 had significant sales in 2 or 3 sectors, and almost half had significant sales in 3 or more agribusiness industries.

Guide to Agribusiness Industries and Company Selection

Sector & Industry[1]	Min U.S. Revenue ($ mil)[2]	CDE Industry Definitions
Inputs Sector
(A) Agricultural Implements	$500	Manufacture of automotive farm equipment and attachments. Excludes industrial earthmoving and irrigation equipment and storage facilities.
(B) Fertilizer/Agrichemicals	$300-$400	Fertilizer – $400; Agrichemicals – $300. Manufacture of mixed or blended fertilizers; pesticides, herbicides or fungicides; and animal health products generally blended into formula feed.
(C) Commercial Feed/Seed	$175-$250	Feed – $250; Seed – $175. Manufacture and mixing of poultry and livestock feed; production of hybrid and other seed.
Processing Sector[3]
(D) Meat/Poultry Products	$200-$300	Meat – $300; Poultry – $200. Slaughter, dressing, packing and canning of meat and poultry; eggs.
(E) Dairy Products	$200	Pasteurization and processing of raw milk; other dairy products.
(F) Bakery/Grain/Edible Oil Products	$200	Bakery products; flour, rice and wet corn milling and by-products; cereal breakfast foods; pet foods; edible oil, margarine and mayonnaise. Does not include livestock and poultry feed (see C); corn-based sweeteners are classified under H.
(G) Vegetable/Fruit/Nut Products	$200	Canning, freezing, drying, dehydrating and juicing, baby foods; peanut butter. Ready-to-serve entrees or side dishes are classified as convenience foods under J.
(H) Sweeteners/Confectionery	$200	Cane and beet sugar refining, molasses; corn-based sweeteners; candy, including chocolate, cocoa products and chewing gum; jams, jellies and frostings.
(I) Beverage	$200-$350	Soft drink, wine and distilled liquor manufacture – $200; Brewers – $350. Manufacture of soft drink flavorings and syrups; soft drink and water bottling; powdered beverages; beer, wine and distilled liquor, excluding excise tax.
(J) General Grocery/ Convenience Foods	$200	Manufacture of highly processed food items such as snack foods, TV dinners, frozen and canned specialty foods; miscellaneous foods such as coffee, tea, fish, seafood, sauces and spices. Also includes diversified processing which cannot be included within a single industry because of insufficient data.
(K) Tobacco/Tobacco Products	$200	Manufacture of cigars, cigarettes and other tobacco products, excluding excise tax.
Distribution Sector[4]
(L) Farm Product Marketing	$350	Marketing of farm produce, dairy, meat, poultry and other products; also livestock marketing and feedlot operations. Includes non-processors which have significant production activities in farm goods. Also includes marketing of farm supplies classified under A, B and C.
(M) Wholesale Grocery	$700	Purchase and resale of general or specialty grocery products.
(N) Retail Grocery	$850	Retail food operations of supermarket and convenience store chains.
(O) Food Service	$350	Prepared food distribution to the food service industry and management under contract of food service and vending operations.
(P) Restaurant	$250	Restaurant and fast food systems (combined parent-owned and franchised operations sales).

1. A sector is a general area of economic activity serving a similar function – the provision of capital inputs, the processing or preservation of foodstuffs, or the distributive operations between manufacture and consumption. Industry indicates the processing of a similar class of products, generally based on particular commodities such as dairy or meat, or the provision of a similar class of distributive services, such as wholesaling and retailing. Product lines are more specific lines of manufacture or distribution, such as ice cream within dairy and general grocery supermarkets within the retail industry. The CDE industry definitions are for the most part comparable to the three and four digit categories of the 1972 Standard Industrial Classification system of the U.S. Department of Commerce.

2. These figures represent the minimum level of U.S. sales in each industry that were required for companies to be included in the Directory. A company had to meet the revenue cut-off point in at least one industry for inclusion. Three exceptions to this general rule were made: 1) In the food processing sector, companies were included if they had total processing sales of $200 million or more regardless of whether they met individual industry minimums; 2) Companies with widely diversified operations in the processing sector were included if they had 50% of the revenue cut-off point in one industry and total processing sales of at least $150 million; 3) A company was also included if it had 50% or more of the minimum industry revenues in two or more sectors. Excise tax on tobacco products and alcoholic beverages, when identified, were excluded from all sales figures.

3. The revenue cut-off point represents processing operations, defined as the application of manufacturing techniques, both mechanical and chemical, which result in a transformation of the materials. (Companies which produce and distribute, but do not manufacture, raw farm products are considered under the distribution sector.) Some processing companies were selected on the basis of sector-wide sales dispersed among several food processing industries, as current disclosure regulations do not necessitate a breakdown of industry revenues. Such companies must have total processing sales of at least $200 million to be included.

4. Companies engaged in the distribution of farm supplies, farm products and wholesale grocery must take possession through purchase of the items marketed. Therefore, operations such as food brokerage or growers' marketing associations are not considered.

Introduction

Part Two consists of profiles of 222 major agribusiness companies. Each profile presents the principal stockholders and institutional relationships that could be identified from publicly available sources. Appearing first, in alphabetical order, are the profiles of 153 public U.S. corporations. These are followed by the Control Chart which profiles 69 tightly-held and private firms, cooperatives, and foreign corporations. All data appearing in this Part is for December 31, 1976, unless otherwise noted by an off-dating letter. The top five stockholders in each profile, as well as the relationships to law firms, investment banks, and accounting firms, are cross-indexed in Part Four of the Directory.

STOCKHOLDER INFORMATION

The Corporate Data Exchange followed a set of procedures to identify and rank stockholders that voted or managed at least two tenths of one percent of a company's outstanding votes.[1]

I. Determining Total Votes

The voting power of all classes of a company's stock — common and preferred — was reviewed to determine which should be included in the total vote figure. In the case of 35 corporations, preferred classes were included making it possible to integrate the voting power of significant preferred holdings. All figures in the company profiles are therefore expressed in terms of votes; all percentages are calculated on the basis of total votes outstanding for the included classes of stock.

II. Sources for Identifying Principal Stockholders

CDE systematically surveyed public sources to identify stockholders that voted or managed at least two tenths of one percent of the company's total votes. The public sources can be divided into reports submitted by 1) institutional investors, and 2) profiled companies.

1. Reports from Institutional Investors

Nationally-Chartered Banks: special reports of 192 banks with trust assets of $75 million or more were filed with the Comptroller of the Currency for year end 1976. The report requires the bank to list the number of shares over which it exercises any management powers, sole or partial investment discretion, and sole or partial voting authority.

State-Chartered Banks: nine of the largest voluntarily issued reports listing their trust department holdings. Two of these — Morgan Guaranty Trust Co. of New York and Harris Trust and Savings Bank (Chicago) — generally follow the Comptroller's format. Six others published a variety of information which in some cases was only useable after soliciting additional data (e.g. voting rights).

Investment Companies: mutual funds and other investment companies, both domestic and foreign, regularly report their stock portfolios to the public.

Insurance Companies: U.S. life and property firms file public reports with state regulatory agencies listing their holdings.

Private Pension Funds: most corporate pension funds are managed by banks or insurance companies, and their holdings are reported with the holdings of those institutions. However, the study included five very large self-managed pension funds, as well as one fund (E. I. Dupont de Nemours) administered by a non-reporting bank (Wilmington Trust Co.).

Public Pension Funds: most state, county, and municipal pension funds are self-managed. CDE received portfolio reports from 50 of the largest public funds. We further sought information on who manages and votes the stock of each fund in order to eliminate holdings already included in bank reports.

Employee Benefit Plans: for corporations with large thrift, savings, and stock purchase plans, CDE recorded the plans' holdings in profiled companies and determined how the stock was voted.

Foundations: most of the largest are self-managed. CDE received portfolio reports from 62 foundations, all of which had total assets of $50 million or more.

Educational Endowments: the portfolio holdings of universities and colleges were collected from over 100 institutions.

2. Reports from Profiled Companies

Securities and Exchange Commission: the proxy statement of each profiled company included 1) the name of any holder of 10% or more of the company's stock, and 2) the holdings of directors up for election. Secondary offering prospectuses and the proxy statements of firms recently merged into the profiled company were also consulted.

III. Forming Complexes

A number of stockholders are in fact controlled by another entity (i.e. individual, family or corporation). In order to reveal the full power of all investors, CDE devised a method for consolidating the separate holdings owned or managed by a single complex. In analyzing each stockholder, CDE applied two standards to form such complexes:

1. Family Relations: the components of a family, including relatives, employees, estates, trusts, and family-controlled foundations, were combined into one complex. Companies or partnerships known to be 40% or more owned by family members were also grouped with these family interests.

2. Intercorporate Control: one corporation or government agency controls an institutional investor through one of two mechanisms:

Ownership of 40% or more of the company's voting stock.

Management[2] of one firm by another through a legal agreement, such as the management of mutual funds by an investment advisor, pension funds by commercial banks, and public pension funds by a government agency.

This process allowed the separate holdings of a complex to be aggregated and the total attributed to the head of the complex (i.e. ultimate parent). All identifiable stockholders comprising a complex were listed under the main entry with their holdings in parenthesis next to their name. A single indentation indicates that the head of the complex owns at least 40% of the subentry's voting stock. Family members are also given a single indentation when listed under a family complex. A double indentation indicates that the head of the complex controls the subentry through a management arrangement. In certain cases a complex involves both ownership and management and the listing of each subentry reveals its control relationship to the ultimate parent.[3]

IV. Ranking the Identified Stockholders

All the stockholders were coded, key punched, and processed by computer using a special CDE-developed program. Each profile first ranks in descending order all stockholders with any voting power. Holders with no identifiable voting power are then ranked according to their total managed holdings. Totals for each column are also presented along with a table listing the voting concentration for the top 5, 10, 15, and 20 principal stockholders.[4]

NON-STOCK INFORMATION

In addition to the ranked list of top voting stockholders, each profile presents a breakdown of the company's operating revenues and income by business line, a description of its stock structure, a list of important outside institutional relationships maintained by the company, major changes in corporate control since the date of the profile (December 31, 1976), and the voting concentration among the top holders.

Business Lines: a breakdown of the company's operating revenues and income by primary areas of activity (percentages in parenthesis indicate a negative figure). These categories are not fully comparable between companies because detailed and uniform reporting is not required by the SEC.

Stock Structure: significant classes of voting stock, and for each class, the number of shares outstanding, the votes per share, the total number of votes, and the number of record holders. The combined total votes is provided where more than one class is listed. In the few cases where a company had more than three classes of voting stock, the classes with the same number of votes per share were combined into one listing.

Counsel/Washington Representative: a select list of the company's outside legal counsels, the fees they were paid, the service performed, and the year in which the service was provided. In the few cases where more than three law firms were identified, priority was assigned respectively to the general counsel, the Washington representative, the counsel for a securities' offering, for tax matters, mergers, and major court cases.

Investment Bank: a list of the company's major investment banks with the services they performed. Where more than three investment banks were identified, priority was given respectively to the lead underwriter for the latest stock issue, the lead underwriter for the latest offering of debt securities, the financial advisor in the last important merger or acquisition, and the agent in the last private placement of debt securities.

Accountant: the accounting firm which audits the company's financial statements.

Changes in Control: the acquisition of the company by another since the date of the profile (December 31, 1976) and select changes in very large stockholdings.

Voting Concentration: the cumulative voting power of the top 5, 10, 15, and 20 stockholders.

NOTES

1. The study used definitions of voting and management powers developed by the Comptroller of the Currency in regulating nationally-chartered banks banks. Under voting power we included all shares over which the holder has sole or shared voting authority. Managed holdings include any shares over which the holder has sole or partial investment discretion, investment advice, sole or partial voting authority, and/or other trustee authority. Except for banks, the figures for voting and managed holdings will always be the same. Bank trust departments often manage shares they cannot vote, which leads to the discrepancy between their voting and managed figures. We have excluded custodian holdings, i.e. shares over which the bank has no significant powers but merely acts in a safekeeping capacity.

2. The term management is used in two distinct ways. On the one hand, the term is used to describe the administrative power exercised by an investment advisor over a mutual fund. In other instances, the term is used to describe holdings over which institutional investors exercise any management authority, i.e. voting authority, investment discretion, investment advice and trustee authority.

3. Bank holding companies were listed only if they controlled more than one large financial institution holding significant amounts of stock. Otherwise only the banking subsidiary was listed. The separate funds of a jointly managed public pension system are also not listed separately. In a few cases, particularly for mutual funds and mutual insurance companies, a holder is determined to be controlled by another entity if they share a majority of their boards of directors.

4. In the case of four profiled companies (HEINZ, KELLOGG, SQUIBB, and STALEY) CDE identified both parties sharing the voting power over a single major holding. The holding was listed in the voting power column under only one party but in the total managed holdings column under both parties. This duplication in the managed column was eliminated by deducting the doubie entry before the final addition. In a few cases banks failed to disclose whether they exercised any voting power over the holdings they managed. They were not attributed any voting power and therefore were ranked at the bottom of the list.

(1) RANK: Holdings ranked in descending order according to voting power and total managed holdings. Total managed holdings include all shares listed under voting power as well well as any shares over which the stockholder has investment authority.

(2) FAMILY COMPLEX: Combination of identifiable holdings of all known family members and family-controlled trusts, foundations, and corporations.

(3) EMPLOYEE BENEFIT PLAN: Includes thrift, savings, stock purchase and similar private plans that facilitate acquisition of stock by company employees. Excludes stock option plans limited solely to "key employees" such as officers/directors. Each plan entry is arranged to indicate how these shares are voted. In the hypothetical example below, the Widget Co Thrift Plan holds 1,000 shares of Widget Co stock for 25 plan participants.

Voting	CDE Entry
Bank trustee votes	ABC Bank NA Widget Co Thrift Plan (1000)
Participants vote	Widget Co Thrift Plan (25 Participants)
Participants may direct voting; undirected shares voted by company	Widget Co Thrift Plan (25 Participants/Internal Trustee
Participants may direct voting; undirected shares voted by bank trustee	ABC Bank NA Widget Co Thrift Plan/25 Participants (1000)
Company may direct voting; undirected shares voted by bank trustee	ABC Bank NA Widget Co Thrift Plan/Internal Trustee (1000)

(4) OFFDATING: All holdings are for 12/31/76 unless followed by a letter which indicates the following dates:

1st Quarter	X	A	E	J
2nd Quarter		B	F	K
3rd Quarter	Y	C	G	L
4th Quarter		D	H	M

(5) PUBLIC EMPLOYEE PENSION FUNDS: Identifies the administrator of state, county, and municipal public retirement systems.

(6) TYPE OF STOCKHOLDER: A symbol used by the CDE to characterize certain stockholders. Indicates the principal activity of financial institutions whose corporate names do not contain key words such as "bank" and "insurance." The following four symbols are used:

< Diversified holding company
+ Investment bank or brokerage firm
* Investment company manager or advisor
Director/Officer of profiled company

(7) SUB-ENTRIES: Significant and identifiable sub-entities whose holdings are included in the total for the complex head. A single indentation indicates that the complex head owns at least 40% of the sub-entry's voting stock. Family members are also given a single indentation when listed under a family complex. A double indentation indicates that the complex head controls the sub-entry through a management relationship such as an investment advisory agreement or a trust agreement between a commercial bank and employee benefit plan.

General Financial Information

This chart presents basic financial and employment figures for all 222 companies and cooperatives. The data, which was obtained from public documents, permits the reader to compare the size and financial strength of each firm. Because precise data is not disclosed on a systematic basis, figures for cooperatives and private companies are often incomplete or estimates. In addition, public corporations do not consistently report data in some of these categories due to inadequate disclosure requirements.

Several categories require explanations:

Fortune Rank: for convenience we have used the ranking assigned by Fortune on the basis of sales or asset figures for 1976. The rankings are drawn from Fortune's list of the top 1,000 industrial firms and listings of the top 50 transportation (t), retailing (r), and diversified/financial (f) firms. In the few instances where sizeable companies were not ranked by Fortune, CDE assigned a ranking in the corresponding listing. A few cases are also noted where Fortune used a different sales figure than reported by the company (usually due to varying treatment of discontinued operations) and therefore CDE assigned the company a different rank.

U.S. Tax Rate: CDE used the U.S. tax rate on worldwide income published in Tax Notes, the journal of Tax Analysts & Advocates, a non-profit, public interest organization. This data is based on research provided by the Fund for Public Policy Research. Nc indicates that the rate for this company was not computed by Tax Notes.

Total Debt: this figure includes short-term debt, that portion of long-term debt due within one year, and all long-term debt due after one year.

Debt/Equity Ratio: total debt divided by total stockholders' equity is an indicator of a company's relative dependence on debt funding.

Percent of Employees Unionized: companies do not systematically report the number of their employees who are union members. Most fail to disclose this information altogether while others only offer an approximation.

Labor Costs: this figure represents total wage costs as a percent of total sales, an item which is not systematically available for all companies.

Foreign Operations

Ninety-nine of the 206 U.S. companies in this Directory have significant foreign operations. Twenty-three make approximately a third or more of their sales abroad and 41 a fifth or more. Twenty-three companies have more than 10,000 employees abroad and 30 pay 20% or more of their taxes to foreign governments.

All information was obtained from public sources. However, there are still significant gaps in the data available on foreign operations. Of the five categories which CDE attempted to identify, those most frequently omitted are the number of foreign employees and total net assets abroad. Occasionally certain companies omit foreign revenue or income disclosure because they do not meet the minimum threshhold of 10% of total revenues and income established by the Securities and Exchange Commission. The tax item, which is often omitted, represents the percentage of the company's total taxes which were paid to foreign governments. This data was derived from information published in Tax Notes, the journal of Tax Analysts and Advocates (see introduction to General Financial Information). The notation, nc, indicates that the relevant data was not calculated by Tax Notes.

Beyond these gross statistics, however, more systematic and detailed information is even harder to find, inhibiting an accurate assessment of the importance of foreign activity to total company operations. For instance, it is rarely possible to determine the portion of each company's foreign activity which is attributable to a distinct business line, in this case agribusiness. In the chart we have listed by country the agribusiness manufacturing and service activities in which the companies are engaged. But in only a few cases was it possible to determine or estimate a foreign agribusiness sales figure.

Virtually impossible to uncover are country-by-country sales and asset figures which would permit a greater differentiation of the importance of each company's distinct country markets and subsidiaries. To complicate matters further, some companies such as Ford, ITT, and Kraft exclude Canada from their foreign operations, thereby distorting even their aggregate figures. A few companies have disclosed region-wide breakdowns for Europe, South America, and the like, but all resist more precise country disclosure.

Finally, many companies do not always state what portion of their total foreign sales and income is due to actual foreign manufacturing operations, and what portion (if any) is attributable to exports from the United States (in the chart we have indicated wherever possible if the figure includes exports). An accurate assessment of the dependence on foreign activity requires a clear distinction between these two categories, as well as a corollary figure indicating the value of a company's foreign manufactured products which are imported back into the United States.

In 1978 some improvements in the reporting of foreign sales, income, and assets were made in company reports. Following a ruling by the Financial Accounting Standards Board, companies will have to report these figures by geographic area on a systematic basis. A few companies have extended such disclosure to a breakdown of foreign operations by distinct business lines.

CORPORATE DATA EXCHANGE, INC.

Corporate Data Exchange, Inc. (CDE) is an independent tax-exempt research organization formed in 1975 to investigate economic concentration and corporate control. In addition to publishing the Stock Ownership Directory series, CDE maintains a data base on industries and companies to answer specific requests from public interest groups, trade unions, government agencies, and other organizations. Since its inception, CDE has provided information to such organizations as the National Council of Churches, the AFL-CIO, the U.N. Center on Transnational Corporations, and congressional committees.

The following publications are available from CDE:

STOCK OWNERSHIP DIRECTORY SERIES

No. 1 Transportation (1976; 336 pages). Profiles of 176 companies from eight transport sectors: railroads, motor carriers (freight & passenger), airlines, natural gas pipelines, freight forwarders and water carriers. Includes extensive introductions and statistical data for each sector.

No. 2 Agribusiness (1978; 250 pages). Profiles of the 222 largest companies active in farm inputs, food processing and food distribution. Includes hard-to-find statistical data on business lines, foreign operations and concentration.

No. 3 Banking & Finance (1980; 250 pages). Profiles of 240 companies in eight financial industries: commercial banks, investment banks, life insurance, savings and loans, savings banks, property/casualty insurance, finance companies and investment advisors. Also includes ranking charts for each industry.

No. 4 Energy (1980; 250 pages). Profiles of the 142 leading companies active in natural gas, oil, coal, nuclear and electric utilities. Ranking charts for each field plus figures on concentration.

Fortune 500 (December 1980; 500 pages). Stockholder profiles of the largest companies in the United States, whose combined sales account for over three-fourths of all manufacturing revenues.

The CDE industry series will continue with Defense, Communications and Health Care. Each volume will be updated at least every four years and more frequently if there is sufficient interest.

HANDBOOK SERIES

Pension Fund Investments (1979; 125 pages). The most comprehensive survey to date of stock investments made by public and private U.S. pension plans. The holdings of 142 plans in 99 "target" companies which met one or more of four criteria: predominantly non-union, OSHA violators, EEO violators, and major investors or lenders to South Africa.

U.S. Bank Loans to South Africa (1978; 50 pages). Data on all identifiable U.S. bank loans to South Africa, including Ex-Im financing, from 1972-mid 1978. Includes loans made by 100 banks, introduction, charts and tables.

Banking & Finance (April 1980; 60 pages). A primer on the structure and concentration of banking and seven other financial industries. Includes summary data from the corresponding stock ownership directory and ranking tables of the 240 companies as well as other statistical material.

SERVICES

Stock Ownership Profiles from the CDE Data Bank (on request). Photocopies of previously published company profiles are available. Inquire for complete list. Special stockholder profiles on individual public corporations can be compiled upon request. The entire CDE company profile data bank is also available on computer tape.

TERMS

Please inquire for all prices. Special discounts are available to low-budget non-profit organizations.

Preface

This Directory is a unique reference guide to the nation's leading banking and financial companies. CDE profiles the largest stockholders of 240 companies, 153 of which sell their stock to the public.

This volume is the third in CDE's Stock Ownership Directory series. Each volume presents accurate and detailed information on the principal stockholders of major U.S. corporations within a specific industry or economic sector. Future directories will cover Energy, the Defense Industry and the Fortune 500 Industrials.

Readers of our first two volumes on Transportation and Agribusiness will note one significant change in the company stockholder profiles. In this and future directories, stockholders will be ranked according to their investment authority, rather than by their voting power.

A companion publication to this Directory, the CDE Handbook: Banking & Finance, will be released in May 1980. It will provide an overview of the structure and concentration of the eight financial industries covered in this Directory, statistical tables, and an analysis of the data in the Directory.

Every effort has been made to guarantee the accuracy of the data. Invariably some errors are bound to appear in such a comprehensive compilation. We urge readers to call these to our attention and welcome suggestions about how to make future directories more useful.

Many individuals made significant contributions to this study. We are particularly indebted to Gordon Adams, director of research on Government Relations, Council on Economic Priorities; Thomas R. Asher, attorney, Washington, D.C.; Robert Cohen, director of Urban Planning, Conservation of Human Resources, Columbia University; Fred Goff, The Data Center; John Harrington, president, California Alternative Investment Task Force; Edward S. Herman, professor, Wharton School of the University of Pennsylvania; Prexy Nesbitt, research director, Program to Combat Racism, World Council of Churches; Barbara Stallings, professor, University of Wisconsin; and Howard Wachtel, professor of Economics, American University.

This study was made possible through grants from the Shalan Foundation and the World Council of Churches.

The Editors

Guide to the Directory

This Directory consists of three parts. The first outlines the method for selecting the 240 companies profiled in the Directory. It also includes charts that rank each company within its industry. Part Two presents full profiles of the 153 firms which are public U.S. corporations. Each profile ranks the principal stockholders and identifies key institutional relationships. These public companies are listed throughout the Directory in UPPER CASE letters. A Control Chart follows these full profiles and identifies the major shareholders and institutional relationships for the 87 remaining firms. These companies, which appear in the Directory in Upper/Lower Case letters, include tightly-held and private firms, mutuals and foreign corporations. Part Three contains four indexes from the company profiie data. Unless otherwise noted all stock ownership data is for the first quarter of 1979.

The following abstract will help the user become more familiar with the Directory.

Company Index

- Indicates the page on which the company profile appears in Part Two and the ranking charts in which the company appears in Part One.

PART ONE: BANKING & FINANCE

- Explanation of the criteria used to select the 240 major companies.
- Nine charts ranking the largest companies in each financial industry and providing select financial and operating data on each company.

PART TWO: COMPANY PROFILES

Complete Profiles of 153 Public U.S. Corporations

- Principal stockholders ranked according to their investment power.
- Commonly-controlled holders, such as investment companies and insurance companies, grouped under one complex.
- Breakdown of holdings according to investment and voting power.
- Investment power concentration of the top 5, 10, 15, and 20 shareholders.
- Principal legal counsels, investment bankers and accountants.
- Product or service line breakdown of company revenues and income.

Control Chart of 87 Other Companies

- Major shareholders, accountant, law firms, and investment banks of 87 companies, consisting of tightly-held and private firms, mutuals and foreign corporations.

PART THREE: INDEXES

- Top five stockholders in each company – a guide to the most influential stockholders in banking and finance.
- Legal counsels and their banking and finance clients.
- Investment banks and their banking and finance clients.
- Accounting firms and their banking and finance clients.

Errata

Due to a computer programing error, a few select holders were omitted from the company stockholder profiles. All missing entries which should have appeared among the top 5 stockholders or had more than 1% of a company's outstanding voting stock are listed below by company. One holder, First Union Bancorp, preceded by •, appears in the profiles but with an incorrect figure. All other information in the profiles is correct except for the stockholder ranking which must be adjusted accordingly. The Index of Top Five Stockholders (pp. 217-233) has been updated to reflect all entries appearing in the errata.

Introduction

This Directory presents profiles of the ownership and institutional relationships of 240 major financial companies operating in the United States. CDE selected the largest companies in nine financial industries at December 31, 1977:

- 100 bank holding companies . . . with $1.3 billion or more in assets
- 50 life insurance companies . . . with $1.2 billion or more in assets
- 30 property/casualty insurance companies . . . with $610 million or more in net premiums
- 20 investment advisors . . . with $2 billion or more in managed assets
- 19 investment banks . . . with $1.1 billion or more in underwriting volume
- 18 trust operations . . . with $6.5 billion or more in managed assets
- 15 savings and loan associations . . . with $2 billion or more in assets
- 10 savings banks . . . with $2 billion or more in assets
- 10 finance companies . . . with $760 million or more in loans outstanding

The number of companies selected from each industry was determined by the size of the financial resources of each industry, the degree of concentration in each industry, and the relative importance of each industry to the national economy. For instance, relatively few savings and loan associations were chosen because their scope is limited to mortgage markets.

Of the 240 companies, 153 have issued stock which is publicly traded in the United States. These are listed throughout the Directory in upper case letters, e.g. BANKAMERICA CORP. Forty seven other companies are mutual firms, 24 are private and tightly-held companies, and 16 are foreign corporations. These are listed in lower case letters, e.g. Dillon Read & Co.

Other types of financial intermediaries not included in the Directory are captive finance companies, which primarily finance parent company sales; credit unions, which are relatively small; pension plans, which are largely controlled by banks and insurance companies; and government agencies.

The ranking charts, which list the companies in each industry by size, are based on material taken from general business publications, trade journals and company annual reports. These charts cover information, where available, in four general areas: 1) the volume of financial resources commanded by each company; 2) the level of concentration within the industry; 3) the company's position in key industry markets; and 4) the primary sources of revenues.

The following summary table highlights these 240 market leaders in relation to the industries they operate in.

1. Percentage based on total assets (foreign and domestic) of insured commercial banks.
2. May include small amount of foreign assets.
3. All data for 1976. Figures on total public underwriting with proportionated credit allocated to each manager are not available for 1977. The figure for 1976 represents the total public underwriting for all the firms listed in Chart 7 in addition to 2 firms which were not large enough to be ranked in 1977. The total industry figure for 1976 was $42.5 billion.
4. Percentages based on the totals for all firms managing over $5 billion in assets.
5. Percentage based on the number of trust operations with over $156 million in managed assets.
6. Percentage based on total industry figure for 1975.
7. Measured by total outstanding receivables.

1. The figure represents all underwriting managed or co-managed by the company. It is based on the total public underwriting of corporate and foreign government securities in the United States. Full credit for each deal is given to each manager. It excludes private placements, domestic government securities, and issues sold entirely outside the United States.

2. The total volume was $36,693 million, representing 719 issues. As several managers can be involved in each issue, the percentages for each company cannot be added cumulatively.

3. Unless otherwise noted, data is for 1978. The value of the assets merged or acquired is measured by the acquisition price.

4. Securities revenues include revenues from underwriting, brokerage, and all other securities transactions and services.

5. MERRILL LYNCH acquired White Weld in April 1978. All figures apply to these companies prior to the merger, except for Securities Revenue and Mergers/Acquisitions which represent the post-acquisition status.

6. In January 1978 Dean Witter & Co acquired Reynolds Securities International to form DEAN WITTER REYNOLDS. Underwriting and Private Placement figures apply to these companies prior to the merger. All other data apply to DEAN WITTER REYNOLDS.

7. In December 1977 Lehman Brothers acquired Kuhn Loeb to form Lehman Brothers Kuhn Loeb. Underwriting and Private Placement figures apply to these firms prior to the merger. All other data apply to Lehman Brothers Kuhn Loeb.

8. In January 1978 Loeb Rhoades acquired Hornblower Weeks Noyes & Trask to form Loeb Rhoades Hornblower. Underwriting and Private Placement figures apply to these firms prior to the merger. All other data apply to Loeb Rhoades Hornblower.

9. Data for 1977.

10. Data for 1978.

11. Less then $100 million.

12. The figure represents the number of corporations from Fortune's lists of top 500 industrials and top 50 transportation, retail, utility, banking and diversified financial companies for which the investment bank acted as the lead manager for the most recent public underwriting, agent for the most recent private placement, was represented on the board of directors, or assisted the company in a major financial transaction such as a merger.

NOTE: The four major types of financing include the following:

A. Consumer Financing (in some states restricted to a maximum of $5,000)

a) Direct loans to individuals secured by automobiles, household goods, second mortgages on real estate, and other goods.

b) Purchase of installment retail sale contracts of mobile homes, recreational vehicles, motor vehicles, and other consumer goods.

c) Direct loans to small businesses. This category also includes revolving credit card receivables.

B. Industrial Financing

a) Leasing heavy income-producing equipment, i.e. trucks, aircraft, "fleet leasing," computers, and machinery to manufacturers and others. The finance company acquires title to the leased equipment.

b) Loans for purchasing such heavy equipment; loans secured by heavy equipment; loans for income-producing buildings, i.e. hospitals.

C. Commercial Financing and Factoring

a) Financing includes loans or "advances" to manufacturers, wholesalers, and others which assign their accounts receivable to the finance company. The risks and credit responsibilities are not assumed by the finance company.

b) Factoring includes the purchase of accounts receivable. Risks and credit responsibilities are assumed by the finance company.

D. Wholesale Financing

a) Advances to dealers and distributors for purchase of consumer goods, principally mobile homes and motor vehicles, from the manufacturer. The finance company acquires a lien on the product until the dealer sells it.

1. Financing is measured by the total outstanding receivables.
2. Includes $48 million in "other accounts and notes receivable."
3. Excludes unearned finance charges.
4. Data for 12-31-76. Includes some income from insurance operations.
5. Represents net receivables.

Introduction

Part Two consists of profiles of 240 major banking and finance companies. Each profiles presents the principal stockholders and institutional relationships that could be identified from publicly available sources. Appearing first, in alphabetical order, are the profiles of 153 public U.S. corporations. These are followed by the Control Chart (p. 209) which profiles 87 tightly-held and private firms, mutuals and foreign corporations. All data appearing in this part is as of the first quarter of 1979, unless otherwise noted by an off-dating letter. The top five stockholders in each page profile, as well as the relationships to law firms, investment banks and accounting firms, are cross-indexed in Part Three of the Directory (p. 217).

STOCKHOLDER INFORMATION

The Corporate Data Exchange followed a set of procedures to identify and rank stockholders who exercised Investment power over two tenths of one percent of a company's outstanding votable stock.[1]

I. Determining Total Votes

We reviewed the voting power of all classes of a company's stock – common and preferred – to determine which should be included in the total vote figure. In order to combine common and preferred holdings, all figures in the company profiles are expressed in terms of votes; all percentages are calculated on the basis of total votes outstanding for the included classes of stock. In the case of 12 companies, preferred classes were included making it possible to integrate significant preferred holdings.

II. Sources for Identifying Principal Stockholders

CDE systematically surveyed public sources to identify stockholders that invested or voted at least two tenths of one percent of the company's votable stock. The public sources can be divided into reports submitted by 1) stockholders, and 2) profiled companies.

1. Reports from Stockholders

Certain institutions and individuals file reports with the Securities and Exchange Commission disclosing their holdings in public corporations while others voluntarily publish a portfolio listing. CDE included holdings identified in SEC Forms 13-f, 13-d, 13-g and 144 filed in 1979 and collected additional portfolios from non-reporting institutions. These documents reveal the number of shares over which a stockholder exercises investment authority (i.e., the power to buy or sell the securities). They further indicate if the stockholder exercises any voting power over these same shares. CDE's profiles therefore include the holdings of the following type of stockholders:

Bank Trust Departments: under SEC reporting requirements, about 200 banks and trust companies managing $100 million or more in stock must disclose their holdings.

Investment Companies and Advisory Firms: those selling stock to the public, no matter their asset size, must disclose their holdings on a quarterly basis. Private firms firms managing stock assets in excess of $100 million fall under the 13-f disclosure requirements. The holdings of about 300 firms were included.

Insurance Companies: about 100 life and property/casualty firms managing stock assets in excess of $100 million report their holdings under 13-f.

Private Pension Funds: most corporate pension funds are managed by banks, insurance companies, or advisory firms, and their stockholdings are reported by those institutions. However a few self-managed funds report under 13-f to the SEC and their holdings are included in our profiles.

Public Pension Funds: most state, county and municipal pension funds are self-managed and a few report under the 13-f requirements. CDE collected the portfolios of an additional 31 major funds in order to include their holdings.

Thrift and Savings Plans: the funds of these plans often hold very large blocks in the sponsoring company. CDE checked all the profiled companies for such plans, recorded their holdings, and determined if they used an outside trustee to oversee operations. Under previous stock disclosure regulations administered by the Comptroller of the Currency, a bank serving as plan trustee was required to include these shares in its total managed holdings. Unfortunately the SEC eliminated this requirequirement under the 13-f reporting system. CDE decided to list thrift and savings fund holdings under the plan's trustee, which often meant adding them on to the 13-f holdings of a bank.

Foundations: CDE included the holdings of all foundations with $50 million or more in stock assets. Some reported to the SEC under 13-f, while the portfolios of others were gathered from the institutions involved.

Educational Endowments: the portfolio holdings of over 100 universities and colleges were reviewed.

Individuals: those holding 5 percent or more of any class of a company's stock were identified through 13-d and 13-g filings. The holdings of executives not on the board are reported on Form 4, and individuals holding unregistered shares must file Form 144 when they sell part of their holdings.

2. Reports from Profiled Companies

Securities and Exchange Commission: each profiled company selling stock to the public is required to list in its proxy statement the holdings of directors up for election and the name of any individual or institutional stockholder controlling 5 percent or more of any class of the company's stock. CDE also checked secondary offering prospectuses and merger prospectuses for any additional stockholders.

III. Forming Complexes

A number of stockholders are in fact controlled by another entity (i.e. individual, family or corporation). In order to reveal the full power of all investors, CDE devised a method for consolidating the separate holdings owned or managed by a single complex. In analyzing each stockholder, CDE applied two standards to form such complexes:

1. Family Relations: the components of a family, including relatives, employees, estates, trusts, and family-controlled foundations, were combined into one complex. Companies or partnerships known to be 40% or more owned by family members were also grouped with these family interests.

2. Intercorporate Control: one corporation or government agency controls an institutional investor through one of three mechanisms:

Ownership of 40% or more of the company's voting stock.

Interlocking Boards where the majority of the directors or trustees are appointed by one institution.

Management[2] of one firm by another through a legal agreement, such as the management of mutual funds by an investment advisor, pension funds by commercial banks, and public pension funds by a government agency.

This process allowed the separate holdings of a complex to be aggregated and the total attributed to the head of the complex (i.e. ultimate parent). A single indentation indicates that the head of the complex owns at least 40% of the subentry's voting stock or controls a majority of the board. Family members are also given a single indentation when listed under a family complex. A double indentation indicates that the head of the complex controls the subentry through a management arrangement. In certain cases a complex involves both ownership and management and the listing of each subentry reveals its control relationship to the ultimate parent.

IV. Ranking the Identified Stockholders

All the stockholders were coded, key punched, and processed by computer using a special CDE-developed program. Each profile first ranks in descending order all stockholders with any investment power. Holders with no identifiable investment power are then ranked according to their voting power. Totals for each column are also presented along with a table listing the concentration for the top 5, 10, 15 and 20 principal stockholders.

NON-STOCK INFORMATION

In addition to the ranked list of top voting stockholders, each profile presents a breakdown of the company's operating revenues and income by business line for December 31, 1978, a description of its stock structure, a list of important outside institutional relationships maintained by the company, major changes in corporate control since the date of the profile (first quarter 1979), and the concentration among the top stockholders.

Business Lines: a breakdown of the company's operating revenues and income by primary areas of activity (percentages in parenthesis indicate a negative figure). These categories are not fully comparable between companies because detailed and uniform reporting is not required by the SEC.

Stock Structure: significant classes of voting stock, and for each class, the number of shares outstanding, the votes per share, the total number of votes, and the number of record holders. The combined total votes is provided where more than one class is listed. In the few cases where a company had more than three classes of voting stock, the classes with the same number of votes per share were combined into one listing.

Counsel/Washington Representative: a select list of the company's outside legal counsels, the fees they were paid, the service performed, and the year in which the service was provided. In the few cases where more than three law firms were identified, priority was assigned respectively to the general counsel, the Washington representative, the counsel for a securities' offering, for tax matters, mergers, and major court cases.

Investment Bank: a list of the company's major investment banks with the services they performed. Where more than three investment banks were identified, priority was given respectively to the lead underwriter for the latest stock issue, the lead underwriter for the latest offering of debt securities, the financial advisor in the last important merger or acquisition, and the agent in the last private placement of debt securities.

Accountant: the accounting firm which audits the company's financial statements.

Changes in Control: the acquisition of the company by another since the date of the profile (first quarter 1979) and select changes in very large stockholders.

Concentration: the cumulative holdings of the top 5, 10, 15 and 20 stockholders.

NOTES

1. The study used definitions of investment and voting powers developed by the Securities and Exchange Commission for the application of 13-f regulations. Under investment authority we included all shares over which the holder has sole or shared investment discretion. We also included any shares over which the holder exercised trustee power in the case of thrift and savings plans. Voting power includes shares over which the holder has sole or shared voting authority. We have excluded custodian holdings, i.e., shares over which the institution has no investment or voting authority but merely acts in a safekeeping capacity.

2. The term management is used in two distinct ways. On the one hand, the term is used to describe the administrative power exercised by an investment advisor over a mutual fund. In other instances, the term is used to describe holdings over which institutional investors exercise any management authority, i.e. voting authority, investment discretion and trustee authority.

(1) RANK: Holdings ranked in descending order according to investment authority and voting power.

(2) FAMILY COMPLEX: Combination of identifiable holdings of all known family members and family-controlled trusts, foundations, and corporations.

(3) THRIFT AND SAVINGS PLAN: Includes thrift, savings, stock purchase and similar private plans that facilitate acquisition of stock by company employees. Excludes stock option plans limited solely to "key employees" such as officers/directors. Each plan entry is arranged to indicate how these shares are trusteed and voted. In the hypothetical example below, the Widget Co Thrift Plan holds 1,000 shares of Widget Co stock for 25 plan participants.

(5) PUBLIC EMPLOYEE PENSION FUNDS: Identifies the administrator of state, county, and municipal public retirement systems.

(6) TYPE OF STOCKHOLDER: A symbol used by the CDE to characterize certain stockholders. Indicates the principal activity of financial institutions whose corporate names do not contain key words such as "bank" and "insurance." The following four symbols are used:

< Diversified holding company
\+ Investment bank or brokerage firm
* Investment company manager or advisor
# Director/Officer of profiled company

(7) SUB-ENTRIES: Significant and identifiable sub-entities whose holdings are included in the total for the complex head. A single indentation indicates that the complex head owns at least 40% of the sub-entry's voting stock. Family members are also given a single indentation when listed under a family complex. A double indentation indicates that the complex head controls the sub-entry through a management relationship such as an investment advisory agreement or a trust agreement between a commercial bank and employee benefit plan.
